Reich, Italy Merge Armed Might in 10-Year Pact

Hitler Looks On as Von Ribbentrop and Ciano Sign Accord Without 'Ifs or Buts'

The Axis Agreement

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, May 22.—Germany and Italy signed today a ten-year military alliance devoid of ifs or buts and proclaimed themselves makers of Europe's unwritten history—either by diplomacy or by the sword.

Presumably counting in all their satellites, they declared, in the words of German Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop, they had forged a mighty invincible bloc of 300,000,000 people "ready to offer the hand of friendship to anyone, but determined to smash any enemy of their united power."

Japan was the first power to register "present" for the line-up. Its government sent a message thoroughly approving of the military, political, economic and diplomatic alliance.

Hitler Witnesses Signing

With Reichsfuehrer Hitler sitting between them in the Ambassadors Hall of the new chancellery, Von Ribbentrop and Italian Foreign Minister Count Ciano affixed their names to the accord, consisting of a preamble and seven short articles.

Behind them was an impressive gathering of generals, admirals and diplomats—men who will be charged primarily with giving effect to the pact.

The axis diplomats, by the terms of the seven articles, will be called upon first when danger seems to be lurking in the offing. Their joint skill will try to avert the danger. The military will let cannons speak if and when diplomacy has failed.

Von Ribbentrop and Ciano emphasized the principal purpose of the alliance was the preservation of peace.

Another purpose emphasized in the preamble was:

"In the midst of a world of unrest and disintegration to serve the task of rendering safe the foundations of European culture."

The pact became effective at the moment of signature, its "first period" to cover 10 years and the two nations conferring with each other before its lapse with a view to extending it.

Provisions of Pact

It provides that the two nations shall "consult . . . on all matters touching their common interest, or the general European situation;" that each shall give the other, if threatened, its "full political and diplomatic support to remove this threat;" that if either nevertheless becomes involved in a "military entanglement" with another power or other powers, the other nation will "support him with all his military resources;" and that Italy and Germany" are determined to keep up these relations also in the future."

The two contracting powers made no secret of the fact that their action was intended as an answer and a challenge to the western European powers.

Von Ribbentrop put it bluntly when he said in a radio address:

"If democratic war mongers attempt to create complicated pact systems to encircle Italy and Germany, we say that here we are giving our answer."

Ciano was careful to emphasize his conviction that Europe's problems could be solved amicably. He studiously refrained from strictures upon other nations and from too strong an emphasis on the use of force.

Little Girls Follow Own Etiquette; Note-Thrower Seized

By Edward T. Folliard

A Staff Correspondent.

Toronto, May 22.—King George VI and Queen Elizabeth stood among 50,000 persons on the outskirts of this city this afternoon, and for 1 minute and 54 seconds not a soul stared at them.

The eyes of the multitude—and those of the British sovereigns as well—were on Archworth, a 3-year-old chestnut colt as he ran away from his field at Woodbine Park in the historic King's Plate, a race that goes back to 1859 when Queen Victoria, the present monarch's great-grandmother, offered a prize of 50 guineas ($250).

The King and Queen, fresh from an affectionate meeting with the five Dionne sisters, arrived at the race track much as they would visit Epsom Downs or Ascot, riding in a royal landeau and escorted by a squadron of Royal Canadian Dragoons with shiny helmets, red tunics and drawn swords.

After the race, a red carpet was stretched across the track, and the King and Queen walked across it to the judges' stand. There they presented the gold plate trophy and 50 guineas to C. G. McCullough, owner of Archworth, while top-hatted sports and grimy stable boys joined in the tempest of cheers.

A moment of excitement occurred as the King and Queen were returning from the race track to their train. A man identified as Richard Healy, 40, attempted to throw a note into the royal automobile. He was quickly arrested, and held without charge for investigation. An equerry of the King jumped from the procession and picked up the note, contents of which were not dis-

Garners Routed By Smoke From Their Hotel Suite

Smoke forced Vice President and Mrs. Garner to flee their suite on the seventh floor of the Washington Hotel early this morning.

Both were asleep when a short circuit in the air-conditioning apparatus started the fire in the Vice President's room. Mrs. Garner, awakened by the fumes, rushed to his room, she said, and found him "stifled," trying to phone the desk clerk. Then they fled their suite, Garner in red-striped pajamas.

Tanks for Their Majesties? 'Extraordinary,' Say British

They Are Surprised at Military Show Planned in D. C., But King and Queen Make No Comment; They'll Do Their Part

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Toronto, May 20.—"Army tanks for Their Majesties! How extraordinary!"

That is the surprised reaction of Britishers connected with the royal tour when they hear of Washington's plans for welcoming King George VI and Queen Elizabeth on Thursday, June 8. Is there a note of disappointment in that word "extraordinary?" Do they also think that tanks are too militaristic, too suggestive of Hitler and Mussolini?

If they do, they are careful not to show it. After all, they remind you, King George and Queen Elizabeth will be the guests of President Roosevelt and Mrs. Roosevelt, and naturally will fall in with any plans made for them in the American Capital.

It may be that some alterations have been made meantime, but before this reporter left Washington it was said in official quarters that the reception for President Anastasio Somoza of Nicaragua, although emphatically not a "rehearsal," was essentially the same as was being arranged for the King and Queen.

The Somoza welcome, which saw President Roosevelt and his Central American guest riding up Pennsylvania avenue with 15 rumbling tanks ahead, 15 behind, 50 fighting

Pendergast Sent to Jail; Fears He'll Die

Kansas City Boss Gets 15 Months In Tax Fraud Case

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, May 22.—Tom Pendergast, exposed by the Government as a political boss who sold his influence for a promised $750,000, pleaded guilty today to evading income taxes and was ordered to Federal prison for 15 months.

Attorneys for the head of Kansas City's besieged Democratic machine pleaded that any term would be a "death sentence" because of the 66-year-old defendant's weak heart.

"The responsibility for his situation is not upon the judge who imposed the sentence," replied Judge Merrill E. Otis, "but upon him who knowingly committed the offense, knowing it was punishable by imprisonment."

A trail of dollars which led Government agents to the startling discovery Pendergast plunged $2,000,000 in one year on his self-admitted "mania," horse racing, was traced by United States District Attorney Maurice Milligan before sentence was passed.

Pendergast, a behind-the-scenes maker of Governors and Senators over a 28-year period, was typically silent in the crowded courtroom. Once a tear trickled down his cheek but he said not a word. Extremely nervous, his face paled

FBI Help Sought in D.C. Milk Inquiry

Sensational Charges Forecast in Testimony Of Producers' Official

By James D. Secrest.

Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee today will call upon the Justice Department to direct the Federal Bureau of Investigation to assign G-men to assist in the milk inquiry as the sub-committee uncovers charges more sensational than any yet made in the explosive investigation.

The new charges will be made, it is understood, during the testimony of B. B. Derrick, secretary-treasurer of the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association.

Derrick's testimony also is expected to bring to a head the growing feud between representatives of the Western dairy producing districts and spokesmen for the farmers of the Washington milkshed.

The District Committee voted unanimously to ask the Justice Department to investigate after Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, attempted to bring out his bill to open the Washington market to Western cream.

Chairman Bates of the sub-committee on public health revealed that he and J. Edward Burroughs, special counsel, had requested the FBI to take a hand in the milk inquiry but had been refused the aid.

With 20 of the 21 committee members on hand for the stormiest meeting of the year, Schulte gave up his fight to force a vote on his bill only after Representative Shafer (Republican), of Michigan, criticized the bill as "repugnant" and "inconsistent."

Shafer, who formerly has stood with Schulte in a demand that the

Lightning Stuns Md. Housewife, Sets Home Afire

A lightning bolt stunned a Maryland housewife and set fire to her home at the height of the thundershower yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. Estelle Cargill, of 316 East-West highway, Montgomery County, suffered shock as she ironed clothes in the basement when the bolt struck in an upstairs room and flashed down through electric connections. A bed was set on fire, bringing the Chevy Chase Fire Department to the scene.

Ernst Toller, Anti-Nazi Poet And Exile, Hangs Himself

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 22.—Ernst Toller, 46, well-known German author, poet and playwright, hanged himself with a bathrobe cord today, ending an impassioned 20-year struggle for his conception of "democracy."

TOLLER

At the end of the World War Toller was elected President of the Soviet of Bavaria. He served a five-year court-martial sentence in a German fortress for directing German Red guards against government troops. During the last ten years of his life he crusaded on both sides of the Atlantic against fascism.

Toller killed himself in his hotel suite on Central Park West while his secretary was having lunch outside.

Friends attributed his suicide to failing health. They added that his finances were at low ebb, much of the money he made from plays and movie work having gone to various "causes."

Mrs. Frederic Wertham, a friend, related, "Only last night he told my husband and me that he would continue his fight indefinitely for his political and social ideals.

"He liked to relate that he founded a German workers' party

Allen Drafted As District Reorganizer

President Renames Him Commissioner; To Serve 6 Months Or Year as 'Loan'

George E. Allen is coming back to the job he tried three times to quit less than a year ago.

He was nominated for reappointment as District Commissioner by President Roosevelt yesterday and is expected to be confirmed by the Senate—without committee hearings—before the week is out. His job will be twofold—to fill the vacancy he created by resigning from the Board of Commissioners last September and, primarily, to act as key man in plans to reorganize the District government.

Allen will return to the District Building under a "loan" agreement between the President and Harold B. Smith, president of the Home Insurance Co., for whom he now works as vice president. In New York when his nomination was sent to Capitol Hill, Allen communicated with the White House by long-distance telephone and assured the President he would return today, "delighted over the prospects of again serving the District of Columbia."

President Wrote to Smith

Explaining that he had some private business to complete, and that he hoped to see the President shortly, Allen said early this morning, on returning home from New York, "I was as happy as I would be where I was, but the Boss sorted of needed me and I'm glad to go where I'm needed.

President Roosevelt apparently decided to draft Allen for the task of guiding the District reorganization program some time ago and on May 17 wrote Smith:

"We have a vitally important reorganization problem that must be solved. It involves reorganization of the District government. It so happens you have the man I need. He is my old Commissioner, George E. Allen.

"By his experience, his knowledge of the District government, plus his natural ability to get things done, he is the logical choice. I don't propose to ask you to let me have George's services any longer than is necessary. I believe that if he undertakes this job, he should be able to complete the work within a relatively short period of time."

Liaison Man

The President then explained he had talked with Allen about the position and he was "more than agreeable" providing arrangements to "borrow" him could be worked out. The President's letter concluded:

"As one President to another, I beg of you not to veto this request."

Smith was on the West Coast when the White House letter arrived, but upon his return yesterday told President Roosevelt:

"We shall, of course, be happy to comply with your request and loan you the services of our vice president, George E. Allen. There are two reasons for this. First, we are glad to be of help to you in reorganizing the District government. Second: Since we are both agreed

Auto Strike At Detroit Leaves 24,000 Men Idle

Detroit, May 22 (AP).—A strike of C. I. O.-affiliated United Automobile Workers left upwards of 24,000 men idle tonight and a Government conciliator was reported hastening here to offer his services toward a settlement.

Nine hours after the strike closed seven plants of the Briggs Manufacturing Co. and threatened operations in other factories, R. J. Thomas, president of the C. I. O.-U. A. W., announced Federal Mediator James F. Dewey would come here tomorrow from Chester, Pa.

The Briggs strike affected 15,000 employes directly. A few hours after the halt in production of the Briggs car bodies 6,000 day-shift employes of the Plymouth Division of Chrysler Corporation became idle. An additional 3,000 Plymouth workers were expected to be laid off.

The strike was called after a breakdown in negotiations for renewal of a contract that expired a week ago.

Convicts Escape In Ark. Storms

New Deal Won't Yield On Spending, Taxes or Relief, Says Roosevelt

Highlights of President's Talk

"I want to build up the purchasing power of the average of your customers."

"How shall we produce more customers with more money? One school of thought . . . the school of the gamblers . . . is eager to gamble the safety of the Nation . . . on nothing more than their private hunch that if Government will just keep its hands off the economic system customers will just happen."

"Never so long as I am President of the United States will I condemn millions of men and women to the dry-rot of idleness on the dole."

"I am proud that 95 per cent of the relief projects are good, and that 95 per cent of the people are properly on the rolls."

"I want to leave the (tax) proportion between these three groups of taxes (consumer, personal and corporation) just where it is now."

'National income will be greater tomorrow than it is today because Government has had the courage to borrow idle capital and put idle labor to work."

"Our national debt after all is an internal debt owed not only by the Nation, but to the Nation. If our children have to pay interest on it they will pay that interest to themselves."

You cannot expect this Administration to alter the principles and objectives for which we have struggled the last six years."

"I come to you not with a big stick, but with a simple plea for your assistance as American citizens in working out our common problems."

By Robert DeVore.

President Roosevelt stood before 1,000 of the Nation's small-town storekeepers and big-city merchant princes last night and told them flatly there would be no surrender on any basic New Deal principles.

Addressing the banquet of the American Retail Federation's national "forum" at the Mayflower Hotel, the President refused to retreat on these New Deal features:

The unbalanced budget—"today, or even next year."

The present Federal tax level.

The New Deal policy of spending to create jobs.

The Administration's program to improve the lot of the "ill-fed, ill-clad, ill-housed" one-third of the Nation.

On only one important New Deal policy did the President express a willingness to budge. He said he was "wholly willing" to have the undistributed corporation earnings tax "wholly repealed," but only on these "simple" conditions:

Tax Must Be Replaced

First, that it be replaced by "some other form of tax against corporations and not against other groups of taxpayers—and that it shall be raised in such a way that it will be paid by the 28,000 bigger corporations, earning more than $25,000 a year . . .

Second, that "in the repeal of this tax we shall not return to the old tax evasion loophole by which a small group of very rich people were able to leave their profits in closely held corporations."

In a portion of his speech devoted to a "few words about Federal taxes," President Roosevelt stated that, "for good business reasons, two things seem clear to me:

"First, especially in view of the unbalanced budget, we ought not to raise less money from taxation . . . Second, it would be bad for business to shift any further burden to consumer taxes. The proportion of consumer taxes to the total is plenty high enough as it is."

Here he observed that at the speakers' table sat H. Gordon Selfridge, jr., son of the founder of the famous London department store of Selfridge & Co.

"Get him into a corner," Roosevelt urged, "and ask him about the taxes he pays to keep England afloat."

British Tax $180 Per Capita

Selfridge told reporters the English tax bill is about $180 per capita. Then he told another "tax" contemplated to increase the cost considerably of doing business in the British Isles.

He said the English public, in constant terror of air raids, has raised such a clamor that Parliament is certain to pass a bill which would require business in England to construct bomb shelters that every employe would be able to reach in five minutes.

As he entered the banquet hall at 7:35 p. m., the gathering stood up and gave the Chief Executive an ear-splitting ovation for several minutes.

Ovation Lasts Five Minutes

If there had been any antagonism toward the President at the beginning, it was evident he had completely won his audience at the end. They climbed on their chairs and screamed, whistled and clapped for fully 5 minutes.

The youngest Roosevelt son, John Roosevelt, accompanied his boss, Louis E. Kirstein, of Boston, chairman of the federation board of

Supreme Court Votes U. S. Tax On Itself, 7-1

Ruling Applies to All Federal Judges; No Decision on Others

By Robert C. Albright.

The Supreme Court yesterday overturned the old precedent of judicial tax immunity by deciding, 7 to 1, in favor of Federal taxation of its own judges and the incomes of other Federal jurists.

The decision, by Justice Frankfurter, upheld provisions of two revenue acts extending the Federal income tax to "judges of Federal courts of the United States taking office after June 6, 1932."

The court did not rule on the recent public salary tax act making all public employes subject to reciprocal Federal-State tax action, and extending taxation to judges taking office prior to 1932. But it intimated plainly the latter also would be subject to tax.

The lone dissent by Justice Butler expressed "regret that another landmark has been removed." Butler based his objection on the constitutional provision that judicial salaries "shall not be diminished during their continuance in office," which he said was designed to assure judicial independence "essential to our system of Government."

Other decisions as the court sat in its next-to-last "opinion day" of its present term:

Decided 5 to 4 against bondholders in four cases bearing on the 1933 "gold clause" application to

Hamilton Hits Intolerance as Dies Witness

G. O. P. Chairman Disclaims Link With Anti-Semitic Moves

Intolerance is as great an enemy of American institutions as communism, fascism or nazism, Chairman John D. M. Hamilton, of the Republican National Committee, told the Dies committee yesterday as he took the witness stand to deny any knowledge of the activities of James E. Campbell, distributor of allegedly anti-Semetic propaganda.

Dudley Pierrepont Gilbert, Campbell's financial backer, said that he had been attempting to organize a campaign to combat a "red revolution," due to break out this summer. He added that he thought that a man of the Franco type would have to lead the counter revolutionary movement.

Campbell himself, who followed Gilbert to the stand, admitted authorship of a letter advocating establishment of "military courts" in charge of the Federal and State governments. They would remain in existence, the letter suggested, "until each State proves itself worthy of self-government."

Hamilton, who had exchanged letters with Campbell, asserted that "there was nothing in Mr. Campbell's letters to me which indicated in any way that he was engaged in any un-American activities. If there had been, I certainly would not have engaged in any correspondence with him."

Nattily dressed in brown suit and matching tie, the Republican leader

Conferees Approve 100 Million For War Supplies Reserve

Legislation authorizing a $100,000,000 war reserve of "strategic and critical" materials was approved yesterday by conferees of the Senate and House after a deadlock of several weeks.

The Senate delegation agreed on the full sum voted by the House rather than the $40,000,000 authorized by the Senate in a compromise arrangement under which the barter and war debt collection provisions were dropped from the bill.

Designed to make the United States economically self-secure in the event of war, the measure authorizes the Army and Navy to lay in reserve stock of manganese, chromium, tin, and other essential materials not produced in quantity in the United States.

Meanwhile, negotiations with Great Britain for a barter of American cotton for British rubber were reported nearing a successful conclusion. Legislators who have been in touch with the matter said that a definite agreement for the exchange of 1,000,000 bales of cotton, worth about $50,000,000, for rubber of equal value was probable within the next few weeks.

Under the plan, the cotton would be taken from the U. S. Government's 11,000,000-bale surplus.

Included in the House draft of the strategic materials bill was a provision directing the Administration to attempt to collect delinquent war debts owed this country by taking materials sought under the bill in part payment of sums due.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

GILT OFF THE DOME

That great teetotaler and prohibitionist, Senator Sheppard, of Texas, fell kerplunk into a trap at a dinner party the other evening. The hostess, lovely Kitty Byron, wife of the Maryland Congressman, had the coffee prepared extra fancy, with brandy, in honor of the French Ambassador, who was also a guest.

Mrs. W. D. Byron . . . success

Unsuspectingly Senator Sheppard gulped the coffee down, brandy and all. Mrs. Sheppard accepted her cup but left it unsipped . . . Maybe the dry Texas Senator can explain that in his next annual speech on the anniversary of prohibition. (Or maybe he would regard it merely as cooking brandy.)

* * * *

How the beauteous Mrs. Byron, wife of a first term Congressman (and mother of five sons), managed to snag the French Ambassador for a dinner party is another story . . . She found herself living across the street from the embassy, and that put the idea in her mind . . . She asked friends for advice on strategy; but they tried to dissuade her.

". . . lady lassoes an Ambassador"

"Ambassadors are too busy to dine with new Congressmen," they hinted.

Then she phoned the handsome Count de Saint-Quentin's secretary asking when he'd be free for dinner. The secretary soon called back, naming a day. (Maybe the count had seen her across the street.) Anyhow, he was on hand to see America's leading dry swallow brandied coffee. Mrs. Byron had achieved the impossible twice in one evening.

John L. Lewis' most valuable piece of equipment as a great labor leader is that redobutable scowl which always adorns his face in his pictures . . . Usually his visage is most amiable, but he cannot look at a camera without putting on his Dracula mask.

A few days ago Lewis was emerging from the White House after a conference, chatting amiably with Frances Perkins of the Cabinet, and grinning, when the cameramen headed them off.

Instantly Lewis donned his expression of wrath and doom.

But Lewis just scowled on. Maybe you saw 'em in the newsreels, and if you are an employer you trembled.

". . . John puts on his scowl"

Several Wasnington personages are annoyed because the British Embassy has invited them to the garden party for the King and Queen—without inviting heir wives . . . At least two newspapermen replied, accepting the invitations—providing they could assume that their wives were included in the invitations. But the Embassy maintains a Sphinx-like silence.

CAPITAL CAVIAR: A certain Congressman made a speech about the laxity of religious worship . . . A few minutes later, in the cloakroom, he was elected chaplain of the Demagogs Club . . . By a coincidence of "protocol," Justice Douglas at a White House dinner sat next to Senator Schwellenbach, who has never understood why he didn't get the last Supreme Court appointment . . . You can almost imagine FDR, on being told beforehand how the seating came out, saying "O.K.; let 'em sit next to each other." 'em sit next to each other" . . . Rudolph Forster, long in charge of the White House executive offices, is also on some lists of the Secret Six assistants to the President.

Undaunted by royalty is Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State . . . At her luncheon for the Crown Prince and Princess of Denmark, the royal pair lingered on after it was time for Mr. Hull to return to his office . . . Finally Mrs. Hull caught the Crown Prince flashing the Princess a certain look.

"When my husband looks at me like that," said Mrs. Hull brightly, "it always means that he wants me to start making my departure!"

G. O. P. Leader Voices 12-Point Recovery Plan

Martin, at Retailers' Forum, Calls for Revision of New Deal

A New Deal Cabinet member and a Republican leader presented almost opposite views on the best way to speed recovery in speeches before the American Retail Federation here yesterday. Both were applauded.

Secretary of Commerce Hopkins urged 1,000 delegates to the federation's National Retailers Forum at the Mayflower Hotel to uphold the social and economic program of the New Deal, which, he said, still favors businessmen working for profits.

Representative Joseph W. Martin, of Massachusetts, Republican House leader, called for revision of most of New Deal policies and accused the Administration of trying to "run away" from its responsibility and end Democratic Party discords by sending Congress home early.

A 12-Point Program

Martin laid out a 12-point Republican program which most of his audience understood to be a preview of the G. O. P. platform for 1940. The points were:

Keep the United States out of war.

Immediately curb unnecessary, wasteful and reckless spending.

Repeal he "repressive" tax on undistributed corporate earnings.

Revise the remainder of the Federal tax structure to eliminate or modify provisions retarding business recovery.

Repeal "dangerous" discretionary authority of the President over the Nation's monetary system.

Amend labor relations act by "clarifying mutual obligations of worker and employer and the duties of both toward the public."

Define specifically the area of government competition with private enterprise, so business may be able to create jobs.

Restore American markets to the American farmer and wage-earner, and develop new markets for agricultural products.

Adopt "immediate" legislation to rehabilitate the railroads.

Create a special committee of Congress to inquire into the effect of the reciprocal trade agreement policy on American industry and agriculture.

Clarify Federal rules and regulations so industry and business may know what to expect.

Reject all experimental legislation not "clearly helpful in promoting recovery, or, which would subject agriculture, labor or industry to compulsory decrees of a Federal bureaucracy.

President Speaks

Secretary Hopkins, whom the retailers also had known as head of the WPA, paved the way for the appearance of his chief, President Roosevelt at the forum banquet.

Hopkins said the New Deal opposes only business earnings made, first, "by misrepresentation of things that are sold;" second, "by exploitation of labor;" third, "by wanton destruction of natural resources;" fourth, "by abuse of monopoly position, whether by franchise or through trade practice agreements."

He made it clear that at least as far as the Department of Commerce is concerned, the New Deal trend is toward more, rather than less, Government partnerships with business.

Hopkins told the retailers he expected to "strengthen our work by creating within the present framework of the Department of Commerce a division of industrial economics," for which, he pointed out, a bill is now before Congress.

The function of the division, Hopkins said, will be to move into an "area" in which the department will deal "with national and business problems on a policy level—not so much in terms of individual businessmen as in terms of broad economic factors."

No Surrender on Basic New Deal Principles, Roosevelt Flatly Tells National Retailers

trustees, to the meeting. He said he liked his work with a Boston department store, but when asked if he had received a raise, he replied: "No comment."

Evidently many of his audience remembered he had snubbed the recent convention of the United States Chamber of Commerce to deliver personally to them this reply to business pleas that the Government move to speed recovery.

Pointing out that foes of the Administration have set aside this week as National Debt Week—"a week dedicated to merchandising horror about the national debt"—Mr. Roosevelt began to talk of "the debt in businessmen's terms."

First, he said, the debt, like a deposit liability in a bank, must be considered in relation to its deposits. He cited that a "large part" of the Government's debt is offset by debts owed it through the various lending agencies. He said they are being paid "on schedule" and that "these assets are just as sound as the loans made by the bankers of the country."

Investments Pay for Selves

Other portions of the debt he said are "invested" in Federally owned enterprises like Boulder Dam, which will pay out in a period of years, and in public works like flood control dams and levees which "pay for themselves" by eliminating property damage.

Finding a "kinship between your business and mine"—small customers and "millions of average Americans"—the President described his speech as an opportunity to discuss the Government fiscal policy in relation to consumer purchasing power.

"Some highbrow columnists and some high-minded economists," he said, are trying to distract the Administration's attention from restoring consumer purchasing power to a policy of getting heavy industries to work.

Same Experts as in 1929

"By and large," the President said, "you will find these experts are the same as those who in 1929 told us that conditions were sound."

Citing the connection between money in the pockets of Main street families and customers for large and small retailers, Mr. Roosevelt asked how more customers with more money are to be "produced."

One school of thought he called the "school of the gamblers"—"eager to gamble the safety of the Nation . . . On nothing more than their personal hunch that if the Government will just keep its hands off the economic system customers will just happen."

Conservative New Dealers

In the othe. "school," Roosevelt said, are "conservative New Dealers."

"We are the conservatives because we simply cannot bring ourselves to take radical chances with other people's property and other people's lives," he added.

"If millions of citizens starve it is no answer to the starving to say that in the sweet bye and bye business, left to itself, will give them a job."

The President then figuratively took each of his listeners into the White House, sat him beside his desk and went over the budget with him. He did it by telling his audience how he handles businessmen who come to him with economic panaceas and plans for budget cutting.

Item by item, the President said, he goes through the budget with his caller. In each instance, he declared, the businessman usually has some reason for not wanting the item cut. This goes on until the public works item is reached. Invariably, the businessman will suggest this be cut 50 per cent.

The President said he usually replies by suggesting the Government make a beginning by eliminating a grant for a postoffice or some needed improvement in the caller's home community.

United States' Aid Suggested

In every case, Mr. Roosevelt said, civic organizations are "yelling their heads off" to have their projects built with United States' aid. To this the President replies:

"Consistency, thy name is geography. You believe with the United States Chamber of Commerce that Federal spending on public works should cease—except in your own home town."

The President made only one reference to the international situation. It was a plea for sympathy in his effort for preservation of "peace that comes from a knowledge, both abroad and at home, that there will be no further acts of aggression on the part of nations, on the part of groups, or on the part of individuals."

FBI Aid Sought In Milk Inquiry

Washington market be opened to Western producers, said he believed the sub-committee should be allowed more time to complete its inquiry. He said he then would favor "a good bill" to amend the milk act.

Hunter Spikes Proposal

Representative Hunter (Democrat), of Ohio, threw cold water on Schulte's proposal by telling the committee that he had received no letters or calls from Western dairy farmers but had had five long-distance telephone calls from "millionaire distributors."

"They told me they wanted the District milk law amended so they could ship milk in here and cut the price," he said. "They're getting 12 to 14 cents for it in Toledo, and if they can sell it cheaper here there's something wrong."

Representative Smith (Democrat), of Virginia, explaining that he spoke for the small dairy farmers, said he believed that the spread between the prices paid the producer and charged the consumer is too great.

At the same time he warned that any move to lower the District regulations would cause nearby producers to junk expensive equipment, permit the larger distributing corporations to shop around and thereby push down the price paid to the farmer, and might endanger the health of Washington consumers by the absence of local inspection.

Schulte later charged that "a member of Congress" was mixed up with the "mil': monopoly" and after the committee meeting accused Smith of calling upon the police to make the recent seizure of "bootleg" cream.

"You were in on it, too," retorted Smith.

After Schulte had complained loudly against the "dilatory tactics" of the Bates sub-committee and charged it with "collusion" with lobbyists for the "monopoly," members of the committee called upon him to explain his accusations.

Representative Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, who had set off the fireworks by stating that he could not support a bill upon which no hearings had been held and about which he knew nothing, said Schulte's statement could be interpreted as a reflection upon the whole commitee.

"I don't like the tactics of our own attorney," Schulte added, without answering the demands for more specific information in support of his implications against his colleagues.

Representative Bates (Republican), of Massachusetts, said he considered Schulte's charges very grave and insisted upon evidence in support of them.

Chairman Bates, of the sub-committee conducting the investigation, pointed out that the House resolution had set forth seven specific angles of the milk business to be investigated. The committee's counsel, he said, had outlined his plan of procedure to the full committee before the hearings started. Schulte, he said, was absent.

At the conclusion of the meeting Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal challenged Schulte to produce witnesses of his statements that District officials are "in collusion" with the "milk monopoly." He charged that the Indiana Congressman had been repeating vague rumors frequently without supporting them.

Latin America Rejects Fascism, Says Pina Soria

"Popular forces" have triumphed over Fascist penetration in Latin America, Rodolfo Pina Soria, secretary of the Mexican Workers' Federation, asserted here yesterday.

Pina Soria, here to deliver to President Roosevelt an indorsement of his affirmation of Pan-American solidarity, believes that the peoples of all Latin-American nations are "democratically-minded, whatever may be the attitude of a few individual men."

SEC to Sue 100 For 'Front-Money' Business Racket

In an effort to wipe out the "front money" racket, the Securities and Exchange Commission will begin in the near future more than 100 court actions against racketeers throughout the country who are mulcting small business men and corporations of millions of dollars annually, it was learned yesterday.

With the capital market stagnant, the "front money" racket has flourished. The racketeer goes to a small business firm in need of financing and tells the officers that while he has assured brokerage connections which will probably be able to float the issue for them, it will first be necessary that the issue be registered with the SEC and that prospectuses be prepared and filed.

A down payment of anywhere from $500 to $3,500 is immediately demanded, purportedly to cover the cost of preparing these papers. After the "advance fee" is paid the services rendered gradually taper off, without producing any tangible results. No financing is obtained, and in most cases the operator does not even file a prospectus.

New Deal Spending Program Immoral, Says Sen. Taft

Calling the Administration's continued deficit spending "utterly dangerous and completely immoral," Senator Taft (Republican), Ohio, said last night it could lead only to "bankruptcy, inflation and the end of the American way of life as we have known it."

"No government," he said in a radio address, "ever has maintained a continued deficit without finally repudiating its debts."

The Ohio Senator spoke on a program arranged as part of the Republican National Committee's "National Debt Week," intended to call attention of the people to the Government's fiscal position.

N. Y. Profited At WPA's Cost, GAO Aide Says

U. S. Was Overcharged For Maintaining Camp, Committee Told

The Public Welfare Department of the City of New York made a "profit" of more than $54,000 on a WPA project at the expense of the United States, a General Accounting Office investigator told the House committee investigating the WPA yesterday.

Ralph Hale, the witness, introduced in the record a report that New York City had profited on a camp for homeless men by charging the United States a higher rate for maintaining the men than the city actually paid. The camp, named for Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia, had been allotted a total of $837,500 in Federal funds, said Hale.

The investigator stated that the G. A. O. has asked for a refund for the alleged overpayment from New York City's public welfare department.

Before Hale began his testimony the committee announced that public hearings will be suspended until after relief legislation for 1940 has been presented to the House. Committee members in the next few days will hear in secret session representatives of the WPA, NYA, FSA, National Emergency Council and other agencies concerned with relief.

It was understood last night that certain groups specifically interested in preservation of the art, theater, writers' and other white-collar projects were considering protesting to the committee against presentation of the new 1940 relief bill before they have had a chance to be heard.

Hale told the committee that one contractor charged the United States for 12,893 pounds of dynamite and 6,879 caps, although GAO investigators discovered he had actually supplied 5,850 pounds and 3,000 caps. Fifteen "or more" contractors had made similar overcharges for dynamite, Hale said, but the Government had been refunded in every case. Many of the same contractors are still doing business with the Government, Hale said.

Speaking entirely of New York projects Hale told how some contractors claim that they pay a certain wage rate and collect on that basis—while really paying their men considerably less.

Morris Reported Favored for U. S. District Court

Assistant Attorney General James W. Morris, in charge of the tax division of the Justice Department, is being considered to fill a vacancy on the Federal District Court bench, it was reported yesterday.

Morris, a 48-year-old graduate of North Carolina University and Law School, came to Washington in 1933 after a private practice of law in Tampa, Fla., for 20 years. As special assistant to the Attorney General he worked first in the claims division, then in the newly organized tax division. Made an assistant Attorney General in 1937, he was placed in charge of the claims division. Since 1937 he has directed the tax division.

He served in France for 13 months as a captain in the A. E. F. He is married and has two stepsons.

The vacant judgeship is a result of the court enlargement bill passed during the last session of Congress, creating two additional seats on the Federal District bench. One is occupied by Justice Bolitha Laws. The other vacancy has never been filled.

New York Called Savings Control Center

Monopoly Quiz Told A Record 69 Billions Have Accumulated

Concentration of control over savings of individuals occupied the attention of the monopoly committee yesterday as Dr. Donald H. Davenport, of Harvard University, told how dollars roll from all parts of the country to reservoirs on the Atlantic seaboard.

Despite long years of depression and partial recovery, individual savings have reached a record total of $69,000,000,000, or $530 for every man, woman and child in the country, he said.

The public last year, he declared, put away $3,000,000,000 in life insurance premiums, deposits in savings banks and building and loans associations, payments to old-age retirement or pension systems, and the like. In 1937, the total was $4,500,000,000, the largest for any year since 1928. Individual savings aggregated $61,000,000,000 in 1931 and dropped to $54,000,000,000 in the next two depression years.

Control Concentrated

Control over this huge volume of money, Dr. Davenport said, is concentrated in two ways—in a few large institutions and in a limited area along the Atlantic seaboard. The money, however, actually is invested in all parts of the country.

The main reason why control centers around New York City, he declared, is that the States in this region were the first to develop industrially.

Life insurance companies, the most important single savings medium, he pointed out, provide an "automatic, routinized" system of gathering up dollars, regardless of investment opportunities.

At the request of President Roosevelt the committee is studying ways to divert idle savings into productive enterprise, and thus promote business recovery and create jobs. Unless poured back into the spending stream either through capital investment or consumer buying, Dr. Davenport said, savings become "sterile" and thus tend to dry up national income and prosperity.

Six large insurance companies in the New York area, he said, have assets totaling $14,925,000,000, or 56.9 per cent of all life insurance company assets. Of $56,500,000,000 of individual savings which can be identified as coming from particular States, he declared, 67 per cent is held in five States.

No Conclusions Reached

Committee members have reached no conclusions as to what, if anything, should be done about the problem of concentration. This matter must await further study.

Commercial banks, Dr. Davenport declared, have been undergoing a transition from lending to another problem which the committee is pondering over. Due chiefly to heavy buying of Government securities in the deficit financing years, investments of Federal Reserve member banks increased from $7,137,000,000 in 1921 to $22,056,000,000 in 1936, dropping back to $20,396,000,000 during the recession. Commercial loans have declined sharply.

Disputing statements by Col. Leonard P. Ayres, of the Cleveland Trust Co., Dr. Davenport said the public, spurred by insurance company and bank advertising, is becoming more instead of less thrifty.

Henry Dennison, Framingham, Mass. businessman and a member of the national resources committee, urged correlation of Government spending for construction projects. There has been too little cooperation among the 80 agencies intrusted with this form of spending, he said.

Ralph W. Manuel, president of the Marquette National Bank, Minneapolis, suggested that commercial banks be required to separate savings and other time deposits from commercial accounts and to make loans for capital purposes only from the former funds.

3 of 4 Escaped Convicts Captured

Crouch, Idaho, May 22 (AP).—Three of four escaped Idaho prison convicts were captured without a fight late today near here. The fourth, heavily armed, eluded pursuit.

The three captured were Cliff Daugherty, 35, Raymond Curtis, 20, and Edgar Pruett, 19. All were under long sentences for robbery. Still at large was Lonnie Walling, 31.

More than 100 armed men, warned to expect a battle to the death, were pressed into the search for the quartet. Late today their ranks were augmented by 25 National Guardsmen.

He Sues for 6-Year Board Bill, $2,108

Albert Ford Manning sued yesterday to collect a board bill that piled up at $8 a week for nearly six years.

Manning sued the estate of Sarah Mauldin Ford for $2,108. He claimed that in 1930, Mrs. Ford arranged for him to take care of her nephew, Wilbur E. Ford, and promised him $8 a week. The bill accumulated, he said, until 1937, and he was paid only $156.

Fate of Farm Bill Rests on House Today

Leaders Will Attempt To Send to Conference Without 'Instructions'

Under a tight rule barring "instructions" to conferees, House leaders will attempt to send to conference today the record $1,218,000,000 Senate farm bill held motionless in the House for two weeks by economy bloc opposition.

The strict rule was approved yesterday by the House Rules committee on request of Representative Cannon, (Democrat), of Missouri, chairman of the House farm appropriations subcommittee. It will be called up today for a vote, in the face of the bi-partisan economy bloc fire.

The Senate measure contains a $225,000,000 appropriation for farm parity price payments, which the House originally voted down by a 13-vote margin. Also in the Senate measure is $113,000,000 for farm surplus removal, not in the House bill.

The rules strategy was decided on by leaders to move the measure to cosference after bi-partisan opponents sought to send the bill back to the House Appropriations committee for separate consideration of Senate increases.

Criticized by President.

The above budget provisions of the Senate bill recently were criticized by the President, who pointed out that no taxes have been levied to provide the new funds.

Representative Woodrum, (Democrat), of Virginia, today will seek first to amend the conference rule, and then defeat it. Defeat of the rule would automatically send the measure back to the Appropriations committee. Attempted amendment of the rule would be directed at "instructing" House conferees to reject the Senate increases.

Vote Viewed as Economy Test

Leading the Republican side of the opposition fight, Representative Dirksen, (Republican), of Illinois, viewed today's vote on the farm bill rule as a test of Congressional economy sentiment.

Contending House conferees, (actually members of Cannon's subcommittee), are 4 to 2 in favor of the Senate's farm parity increase. Dirksen predicted House conference acceptance of the Senate increases if the bill is sent to conference without instructions.

Co-operatives Bring Christian Economy, Cleric Tells League

Credit unions and co-operatives are bringing "a Christian economy and true political democracy to Nova Scotia," the Rev. Nelson McDonald, pastor of the United Canadian Church of Badeck Forks, N. S., and member of the extension staff of St. Francis Xavier University, declared last night.

Explaining that "people who own things influence our economic and social life," he told the District Credit Union League, meeting in the Commerce Department Auditorium, that "credit unions and co-operatives are means for building our own economic structure and returning ownership of distribution and industry, to consumers."

The program for co-operative ownership of industry, he added, has been closely allied with the adult education activities carried on in small groups throughout Nova Scotia.

The Rev. James Myers, industrial secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, said that "sound economics and fundamental ethics coincide in the operation" of co-operatives, because the basic motive is service rather than profit as in private industry.

Smith, of NLRB, Would Let Employers Call Elections

By the Associated Press.

Donald Wakefield Smith's swan song as a member of the National Labor Relations Board gave members of Congress a fresh hint yesterday that the board might try to meet some of the current criticism of its policies by granting employers the right to petition for workers' elections in some cases.

Granting of this right has been advocated by businessmen and some labor sportsmen on the ground that it would afford employers a means of terminating prolonged and inconclusive disputes between groups of workers as to which was the proper representative for collective bargaining.

Opponents of the idea have contended employers might use the right to discourage union organization by petioning for elections before unions could enroll a majority of employes.

Concedes Employers' Rights

Smith, whose reappointment to the Labor Board was opposed successfully by the American Federation of Labor and senatorial critics of the Wagner act, told the Senate Labor Committee that "under certain circumstances and with proper safeguards" employers should be afforded the right to petition the board for a determination of employes' representatives.

The right could be granted by a change in the board's rules and regulations, without amendment of the act, he testified. Likewise, he said, the board could accomplish another proposed change—extension of time within which a hearing must be conducted after the service of a complaint alleging unfair labor practices—without amendment of the statute.

Chairman Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, of the Senate Committee, said it would be worthwhile for the board to consider these proposals.

He declined, however, to express any opinion as to whether the changes, if accomplished by the board without action of Congress, might eliminate the possibility of amendments being passed at this session of Congress.

3 Codefendants May Testify Against Manton

2 More Plead Guilty To Charge of Plot To Obstruct Justice

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 22.—Martin T. Manton, a former senior U. S. Circuit Court judge accused of having sold his judicial integrity, went to trial today amid strong indications that three of his codefendants might turn upon him and testify for the Government.

Just after a Federal jury made up of ten men and two housewives had been selected, two of the codefendants—William J. Fallon, Manton's business agent, and Forrest W. Davis, an accountant—entered pleas of guilty.

A third, John L. Lotsch, a former Brooklyn banker and minor politician, already had so pleaded. Thus, of the group originally indicted for conspiracy to obstruct justice, Manton and George Spector, an insurance broker, stood alone in challenging the charges.

Meanwhile, U. S. Attorney John T. Cahill brought into his opening statement to the jury the name of another former Federal judge—Edwin C. Thomas, who resigned his district bench in Connecticut recently.

Cahill asserted that two $5,000 payments had been made to Manton by Lotsch in 1936 with the understanding that the jurist would assign Judge Thomas to preside at Lotsch's trial on a charge of soliciting a bribe.

Manton, the prosecutor declared, had told Lotsch that the money was to go to Judge Thomas, who subsequently directed a verdict of acquittal in the Lotsch case.

The trial judge is W. Calvin Chesnut, of Maryland, assigned here by Chief Justice Hughes to hear the case.

Manton specifically is charged with having received, in eight years, a total of $186,146 to influence his decisions on the bench. Until his resignation under fire some months ago, he was the Nation's highest ranking jurist outside of the membership of the United States Supreme Court itself.

Jewish Leaders Petition U. S. to Act in Palestine

A delegation of 250 Jewish leaders from 26 States headed by Dr. Stephen S. Wise, vice president of the Zionist Organization of America, presented a petition to Secretary of State Hull, yesterday urging that the State Department seek to halt the British action in Palesine which would injure American rights and interests.

The petition asked that the United States Government make representations to the British Government that:

"No action be taken for the implementation of the new White Paper on Palestine until the government shall have had an opportunity to examine its terms and pass on its bearing on American rights.

"The United States Government, on the basis of its convention with Great Britain, cannot recognize action taken under the new White Paper in view of the jeopardy created for American interests."

Newlin, of Fort Hunt, Va., who gave no indication where he had found them.

House Bans Credit-Buying Of Beer in D.C.

Retailers Affected: Pass Bill to Permit Railway Extension

The House yesterday passed without debate three local bills in another brief District day session.

One of the bills would prohibit the purchase of beer by retailers on credit. Although Representative Rich (Republican), of Pennsylvania, asked for assurance that the ABC board will not lose any of its authority, expected opposition to the measure did not develop.

The other bills seek to abate $20,600 in taxes owed the District by the insolvent Fidelity Building & Loan Association and to authorize the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Western Railroad Co. to extend its track connections to Buzzards Point.

The House District Committee reported favorably two minor local bills.

One would permit the District government to sell certain unused park property with the consent of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, while the other would authorize the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and the Interior Department to exchange property. The latter is designed to open a new roadway to the Ninth street northeast overpass.

Tension Over Killing of Danzig Nazi Relaxes

Warsaw, May 22 (AP).—Tension over a Polish-German shooting in Danzig relaxed somewhat today and informed sources said protests had proved "fruitful" of progress toward a satisfactory settlement.

These sources said the Danzig Senate had given assurances that three Polish customs inspectors, who have returned to their post at Kalthof where the station was attacked by a partly uniformed crowd on Sunday, would be properly protected against any further incidents.

There was a tendency to regard the disturbances as the acts of Nazi extremists who had overstepped Berlin's policy.

A British military mission will arrive in Warsaw shortly, presumably to discuss military problems that would arise if Britain's assistance were required under her pledge to fight for Polish independence.

Leahy Attends Sr. Espil's Dinner For Capt. Brunet

Admiral William D. Leahy, Chief of Naval Operations, and a group of American naval officers were guests of the Argentine Ambassador at a luncheon yesterday in honor of Capt. Alberto D. Brunet, commander of the training ship, La Argentina, now in New York.

Following a call on President Roosevelt, accompanied by Ambassador Espil, Captain Brunet visited the Navy Department and called on Admiral Leahy as Acting Secretary of the Navy.

Attending the luncheon were: Rear Admiral Ralston Holmes, director of Naval Intelligence; Capt. Jorge Godoy, of the Argentine Navy; Capt. J. R. Beardall, Commander Louis Denfeld, Lieut. Comdr. W. L. Freseman, Liut. Angel Taccari of the Argentine Navy, and Capt. E. S. Piper, U. S. M. C.

3 CCC Boys Unhurt When Ambulance And Auto Collide

A Civilian Conservation Corps ambulance carrying three CCC boys here for hospitalization crashed yesterday with an auto at Sixteenth street and Park road northwest after passing red light, police said.

The ambulance, whose siren was open, was operated by Edward Allen, 19, and collided with a machine operated by Joseph P. Ulman, 28, of Arlington, Va. No one was hurt, police reported.

Nine-year-old William Tyrrell, of 1344 B street southeast, suffered severe scalp lacerations and a possible skull fracture when struck in front of his home by an auto driven by James H. Dickerson, of 110 Sixteenth street southeast.

Security Act Change Allows Bond Purchase

Revised Draft Rejects Larger Grants to States For Dependent Children

Modification of the Social Security Board's old-age pension reserve fund restrictions to permit purchase of Government obligations in the open market is provided in the Ways and Means Committee's revised draft of social security act amendments, it was learned last night.

The revised bill, expected to be introduced in the House tomorrow by Chairman Doughton, and to be finally approved by his committee Thursday, also rejects the Administration request for an increased Federal grants to States for aid to dependent children, while liberalizing the politically potent old-age benefit sections.

Special Meeting Today

Townsend plan and general welfare plan demands for a vote on their old-age proposals meanwhile will be met by the Ways and Means Committee at a special meeting called for today. Following a House poll indicating House defeat of both proposals, House leaders were reported urging an immediate House show-down to dispose of the issue. The Ways and Means Committee is expected to report out one or more of the controverted pension proposals without recommendation, and speed them to a House reversal before the social security act amendments reach the chamber next week.

Modification of the Social Security Board's old age pension reserve fund to permit open market purchase of Government obligations is understood to have been made possible by removing the requirement that pension reserve funds ear 3 per cent by investment in Government securities.

Government securities now are issued at an average interest rate of about 2½ per cent, and it has been necessary for the Government to issue special 3 per cent securities to be purchased by the fund. The change will enable trustees for the reserve account to purchase Government obligations where they choose, to yield the average (2½) per cent Government interest rate. Henceforth, the fnud is expected to be handled in much the same way that postal savings, F. I. D. C., civil serivce retirement and other Government trust funds are administered.

New Leadership Strategy

Proposed increase in Federal grants to States for aid to dependent children from one-third to 50 per cent marked a reversal of earlier committee action approving the increased grants. A subsequent proposal to increase the dependent children outlay providing old-age benefit payments were further liberalized, was rejected.

When the Townsend or general welfare old-age pension plans are brought to a House show-down, they are expected to be offered under a rule prohibiting amendments. A modified Townsend plan was recently drawn by Representative Hendricks (Democrat), of Florida, and will be considered by the Ways and Means Committee along with the original plan. The new leadership strategy is designed to combat Townsend criticism of the Ways and Means Committee for pigeonholeing the bill, to remove pressure for a House petition to discharge the committee, and at the same time to dispose of the issue in advance of social security act liberalization.

Home Loan Aide Cut; Doorkeeper Is Held

Fred W. Catlett, 30, a member of the Federal Home Loan Board, was treated for knife wounds in the back yesterday following an argument with a colored doorkeeper at the Westchester Apartments, where he lives.

The doorkeeper was held.

Although the President's nomination specified Allen be reappointed for a three-year-term, it was said at the White House yesterday the task of reorganization would probably not require his services for any longer than six months or a year. Allen is to act as liaison man between the White House, Congressional committees and the Board of Commissioners.

The reorganization job, it was reported, will be handled entirely by President Roosevelt, Allen and Louis Brownlow, former Commissioner who has been the President's closest adviser on the subject.

Speculation over the President's candidate for the Commissionership has been rife since Allen resigned to enter private life September 1. Allen accepted the insurance post after three times attempting to resign from the District government. It is understood the President studied qualifications of nearly 100 candidates before recalling Allen for the job.

Chairman Kennedy of the House sub-committee on reorganization said Allen's appointment would not affect studies of the Griffenhagen plan, but rather was an "indication of co-operation" from the President. Kennedy announced the revised Griffenhagen plan is completed and his committee will meet in executive session tomorrow morning.

Senators King, Capper, Tydings and Reynolds expressed gratification over the President's action, agreeing Allen was "capable of rendering a great service."

Allen is 45. He was first appointed Commissioner in 1933 and was reappointed when his term expired. He is a native of Mississippi. While Commissioner, he gained wide respect by taking personal charge of local relief problems.

Maritime Fete Picketed by 800

New York, May 22 (AP).—Eight hundred pickets and the breakdown of a public address system combined today to disrupt a celebration of National Maritime Day proclaimed by President Roosevelt.

Speakers, including Senator Maloney (Democrat), of Connecticut, were shouted down as the marchers invaded Bowling Green outside the United States Customs House with placards denouncing operators of sea-going tankers and cries of "boycott Standard Oil."

Murphy Names Amlie One of His Assistants

Thomas R. Amlie, former Progressive Representative from Wisconsin whose nomination to the Interstate Commerce Commission roused such controversy be eventually asked it be withdrawn, yesterday was appointed a special assistant to the Attorney General.

The appointment, which carries a salary of $9,600 a year, was made by Attorney General Murphy and does not require Senate confirmation.

French Charge $5,990 for Postage On Clipper Letters

Marseilles, France, May 22 (U.P.).—French postal authorities today compelled Pan-American Airways officials to purchase $5,990 worth of French air-mail stamps for round-trip "first covers" among 115,000 letters brought here today aboard the Yankee clipper.

The round-trip letters were sent by stamp collectors to get a memento of the first commercial plane flight across the Atlantic.

Boss Pendergast Gets 15 Months

and he rubbed his thumbs together as sentence was pronounced.

Judge Otis, who had it within his power to give the defendant ten years, emphasized the penalty was for tax evasion solely.

"Not a jot or tittle should be added to the punishment," he said, "because it is judicially noticed that the defendant has been a political 'boss' nor because it is judicially noticed that the city and county which he has dominated has been governed with indescribable corruption and dishonesty."

Pendergast's attorneys even said "guilty" for him. That was to Government charges he failed to report income for 1935 and 1936 on $315,000 received in a State insurance deal—the only part he got of the $750,000—and on $128,500 paid him through "straw men" in his business firms.

Put on Probation

But that $443,500 was only a drop in the bucket, Milligan said, contrasted with the $1,240,746.56 on which Pendergast allegedly has failed to pay taxes since 1927.

Judge Otis' 15-months' sentence was on a single count. He also fined him $10,000. On a second count, he placed Pendergast on probation for five years, provided he pays taxes, penalties and interest on the $443,500.

Pendergast, mumbling, "No comment," left the courtroom with a week allotted him by Judge Otis before leaving for Federal prison at Leavenworth, Kans.

holders of bonds providing for payment in the foreign currency equivalent of gold dollars. Justice Black ruled the bondholders must accept payment in devalued United States currency. Chief Justice Hughes and Justices Stone, McReynolds and Butler dissented.

Registration Invalidated

Invalidated an Oklahoma election registration law because it discriminated against colored persons. Justice Frankfurter in a 6 to 2 opinion held colored persons had been given only 12 days in 1916 to qualify for voting after previously being discriminated against. Justices McReynolds and Butler dissented.

Justice Frankfurter in the judicial salary cases agreed with Congress that "a nondiscriminatory tax laid generally on net income is not, when applied to the income of a Federal judge, a diminution of his salary within the prohibition of Article 3 of the Constitution."

"To suggest that it makes inroads upon the independence of judges who took office after Congress had thus charged them with the common duties of citizenship, by making them bear their aliquot share of the cost of maintaining the Government, is to trivialize the great historic experience on which the framers based the safeguards of Article 3," said Frankfurter.

Frankfurter criticized the court's "Evans vs. Gore" decision of June 1, 1920, ruling for the first time that judicial salaries were not subject to the income tax. He said that earlier decision "met wide and growing disfavor from legal scholarship and professional opinion" and was rejected by most of the courts before whom the matter came after that decision."

Specifically, the decision upheld a $631.60 deficiency tax assessment against the 1936 income of Judge Joseph W. Woodrough, of Omaha, Nebr., a member of the Circuit Court of Appeals. The tax was assessed under provisions of the 1936 revenue act, which carried forward similar provisions in the act of 1932.

First 5-to-4 Division

In his 12-page dissent, Justice Butler argued Congress had no power to exact such a tax from a Federal judge, and directed a running crossfire at Frankfurter's reasoning. He said the suggestion that judges as citizens are not immune from taxation "begs the question;" that the Constitution itself puts judges in a separate class and distinguishes their salaries from the income of others. The Constitutional provision for undiminishable judicial income, he said, was inserted as a safeguard of judicial independence, "because in comparison with the legislative and executive the judicial department is weak."

The gold-clause decision by Black was the first 5-to-4 decision of the present term, and the first case in which Chief Justice Hughes has dissented. Two separate opinions were rendered involving bonds issued by the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Co. and the Bethlehem Steel Co. of New York before the 1933 gold act voided contracts for payment in gold.

Black held payment may be made in present United States currency at the face value of the bonds.

Decision Disputed

"The resolution that made petitioners' bonds dischargeable in the same United States legal tender which other creditors in this country must accept, does not contravene the fifth amendment," the majority opinion said.

Official Text of Italo-German Military Assistance Alliance

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, May 22.—The official text of the German-Italian pact signed today in Berlin:

The German Reichschancellor and His Majesty the King of Italy and Albania, Emperor of Ethiopia, consider that the moment has come to bear testimony by a solemn act to the close relationship of friendship and community of interests existing between National Socialist Germany and Fascist Italy.

Now that a secure bridge toward mutual aid and support has been constructed by the common frontier fixed for all time between Germany and Italy, both governments declare anew their faith in the policy, the foundations and aims of which have already at an earlier date been agreed upon and which has proven successful as well for the advancement of the interests of both countries and for rendering secure the peace of Europe.

Firmly bound to each other through the inner relationship of their philosophies of life and the comprehensive solidarity of their interests, the German and Italian peoples are determined in the future also to stand side by side and with united strength to render secure their space for living (Lebensraum) and for the maintenance of peace.

Proceeding along this path pointed out to them by history, Germany and Italy desire in the midst of a world of unrest and disintegration to serve the task of rendering safe the foundations of European culture.

In order to formulate their principles in a treaty there have been designated as plenipotentiaries:

By the German reichschancellor the Reichsminister for foreign affairs, Herr Joachim von Ribbentrop.

By his Majesty the King of Italy and Albania, Emperor of Ethiopia, the minister for foreign affairs, Count Galeazzo Ciano di Cortellazzo, who, after an exchange of their credentials which were found to be in good and proper form, agreed upon the following provisions:

Article One

The contracting parties will remain in constant contact with each other in order to arrive at an understanding on all matters touching their common interests or the general European situation.

Article Two

Should the common interests of the contracting parties be endangered by international events of any sort whatsoever they will immediately enter upon consultations concerning the measures to be taken for safeguarding these interests.

Should the security or other essential interests of one of the contracting parties be threatened from the outside the other contracting partner will give the threatened party his full political and diplomatic support in order to remove this threat.

Article Three

If, contrary to the wishes and hopes of the contracting parties, it should happen that either of them should become involved in military entanglements with one other power or with other powers, the other contracting party will immediately rally to his side as ally and support him with all his military resources on land, at sea and in the air.

Article 4

In order in any given case to make sure that the duties of an ally undertaken in accordance with Article 3 shall be carried out speedily, the governments of the two contracting parties will further deepen their co-operation in the realm of the military and in the realm of war economy (Kriegswirtschaft).

In a similar manner the two governments will also constantly arrive at understandings concerning other measures necessary for the practical execution of the provisions of this act.

The two governments will form standing commissions for the purposes indicated above under Articles 1 and 2. These commissions shall be under the jurisdiction of the two foreign ministers.

Article 5

The contracting parties obligate themselves now, in the event of a war conducted jointly, to conclude an armistice and peace only in full agreement with each other.

Article 6

The two contracting parties are conscious of the importance which attaches to their common relations to powers with whom they are on terms of friendship.

They are determined in future, too, to keep up these relationships and jointly to give them a form consonant with the mutual interests that bind these powers.

Article 7

This pact becomes effective immediately from the moment of signature.

The two contracting parties are in agreement to fix the first period of its effectiveness for 10 years.

They will come to an understanding in sufficient time (Rechtzeitig) before expiration of this period concerning the extension of the effectiveness of the pact.

Dr. Smith Faces Charges Today

Dr. Carrie Weaver Smith, former head of the National Training School for Girls, seeking vindication, will face charges at 10 a. m. today when the Commissioners open hearings on her dismissal from service in October, 1937.

Dr. Smith's ouster was linked with charges of lack of discipline at the school, immorality among inmates, unsanctioned paroles and general mismanagement.

U. S. to Lend Nicaragua $2,500,000

To Extend Credit for Canal Work, Send U. S. Army Adviser

By the United Press.

President Roosevelt announced yesterday that the Government-owned Export-Import Bank will extend $2,500,000 in credits to Nicaragua as a means of furthering the Administration "good neighbor" policy and providing funds for preliminary work on a possible trans-oceanic canal vital to Western Hemisphere defense.

He disclosed the move shortly after he conferred with President Anastasio Somoza of the Central American republic. The amount of cerdits was revealed by Warren Lee Pierson, president of the Export-Import Bank.

At the same time Mr. Roosevelt acceded to Somoza's request for assignment of a U. S. Army officer to direct the military academy of the Nicaraguan national guard. The officer, Maj. Charles L. Mullins, also will study with Nicaraguan officials feasibility of establishing a military aviation school in Nicaragua.

The agreements come less than three months after conclusion of a similar pact with Brazil, which is scheduled to receive $19,000,000 in actual credits and $31,000,000 in future credits in connection with the Administration's drive against the economic encroachment of Germany, Italy and Japan in Latin America.

The White House made public an exchange of letters between the President and Somoza, in which Somoza listed six capital and military needs for adequate development of his country. He also stressed his government's desire to expand economic relations between the United States and Nicaragua through prompt payment of obligations and the elimination of unusual monetary fluctuations.

Specifically, the agreement calls for utilization of part of the credits for canalization of the San Juan River to create a shallow-draft waterway linking Nicaragua's Atlantic coast with western sections of the country. Such a project would facilitate construction of a full-fledged canal, if and when necessary, to supplement the Panama waterway between the Atlantic and Pacific.

Mr. Roosevelt informed Somoza that the project "would have a very important bearing on defense of the hemisphere." And said that he would instruct U. S. Army engineers aiding in the work to study not only the canalization project but east-west highways as well.

Somoza discussed the advantage of private United States investments in Nicaragua, saying:

"The investment of new foreign capital and technical knowledge in the development of the agricultural and mineral resources of Nicaragua is of supreme importance in the carrying out of a sound program for the economic development of the country, and I wish to assure your excellency that the government of Nicaragua will encourage in every way the valuable co-operation of United States citizens who have invested or who, in the future, may invest their capital and technical knowledge in the expansion of Nicaraguan economy."

Italy Acclaims Military Pact Tool for Peace

Duce Might Welcome Signatures of Friendly Powers, Spokesman Says

Rome, May 22 (AP).—Italy has acclaimed her military alliance with Germany as an instrument of "constructive force" for peace and as a unified war plan of the two nations in the event of armed conflict in Europe.

Fascist press spokesmen also indicated that Premier Mussolini might welcome the signatures of "friendly powers," making the formal alliance of the Rome-Berlin axis partners a world coalition of countries that see eye to eye with Italy and Germany.

Virginio Gayda, informed editor of Il Giornale D'Italia, wrote from Berlin that German and Italian forces "will be employed with a unified direction" and added "the undisclosed technical decisions are not to be revealed in advance nor may it be explained how, where and when the allied Italian-German masses above all should point."

German government spokesmen in Berlin said the two nations signed nothing more than was published, but that their military staffs naturally had secrets they were not sharing with others.

Simultaneously with the signing of the pact in Berlin, the Italian government announced that all Italian combatants in Spain would be brought home "within the current month" and a reduction was understood made in the size of Italy's manpower under arms.

It was estimated that there still are between 30,000 and 35,000 Italians in Spain. Over the week-end, numerous men called to the colors this spring returned to their homes on leaves of 30, 60 and 90 days.

Hamilton Hits Intolerance in U.S.

reminded the committee which had subpenaed him that "all my life any form of intolerance has been hateful to me." He recalled that he had fought the Ku Klux Klan, and, more recently, had urged defeat of the Rev. Gerald Winrod, an anti-Semite, in the Kansas Republican primaries last year.

Praising the committee for its work, Hamilton asserted that "everything worth while in this country whether viewed from a material, cultural or spiritual viewpoint is dependent on the preservation of American institutions." It was then that he declared that "intolerance, to my mind, is as great an enemy of these institutions as is communism, fascism, nazism or any other alien 'ism.'"

Hamilton said that Campbell's letter to him, requesting an interview (which never materialized), received some attention because of a covering letter from Felix McWhirter, Indiana Republican Party official. In this letter, McWhirter referred to "my good friend, Jim Campbell." McWhirter will testify today.

Representative Dies (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the committee, queried Campbell about letters he had written McWhirter, beginning "Dear Felix." Campbell angrily denied that the letters had anything to do with the anti-Semitic reports the committee is investigating—reports which Campbell received from Gilbert and transmitted to a mailing list of about 40 friends.

Campbell's protests against Dies' questions about his Republican Party activities led to a sharp clash between the chairman and Representative Thomas, of New Jersey, one of the Republican members of the committee. Thomas vehemently objected to what he maintained were attempts to link the Republican Party with Campbell's reports.

Campbell told the committee that he wanted to establish "military courts" in control of the Government only "in event of a Communist revolt."

Gilbert, New York social register-ite, admitted he had written Campbell a letter containing six questions about President and Mrs. Roosevelt, "to ask our Dixie friends." Dies declared the questions were "too vile for publication" and forbade their being placed in the record.

Asserting that he had no Nazi or Fascist sympathies, Gilbert told the committee of an organization which he said hoped to see "the Stars and Stripes wave over every foot of America," from Panama to the Arctic Circle.

Gilbert, who said he thought "we would very shortly be faced with a civil war," was quoted as urging Campbell, in a letter, to "keep up your courage" and observing that Mussolini had been "stoned from town to town" and Hitler had been "persecuted for years."

Gilbert stated that the New York club waiter from whom he received information about the "plot" to overthrow the Government had given him advance information on various events that later transpired. However, Rhea Whitley, committee counsel, said that every letter from Gilbert to Campbell containing a "prediction" also contained the "proof." Whitley remarked that "I haven't found a single instance where the 'prediction' was made at one time and confirmed at a later date."

Japan Revamps Anti-Comintern Pact With Axis

Tokyo, May 22 (AP).—Japan, anti-Comintern partner of Germany and Italy, has decided to broaden the "basis for co-operation" with the two European powers, but the decision contains no military or political clauses, a high government source said today.

The anti-Comintern pact was described as being made into an "agreement of consultation" under which the three governments would inform each other before any one of them took any decisive steps.

The Japanese course was decided upon Saturday by five key cabinet ministers.

Japan was said to be committed now to a middle-of-the-road policy in which the framework of the anti-Comintern pact, aimed at Communism, has been given a basis for transformation into "something more concrete if circumstances demand."

Great Britain was said to have assured Japan that the projected British-French-Russian understanding was not to be extended to cover the Orient, but Japan was understood to have "declined to take these assurances seriously" in view of the common interest of all three European powers in Far Eastern Affairs.

Palestine Policy Draws Fire In Commons

'Another Victory for Hitler and Mussolini,' Opponents Assert

By the Associated Press.

London, May 22.—Opposition members of the House of Commons assailed Britain's new policy for Palestine today as "another victory for Hitler and Mussolini" while the government gave assurances it would give "proper safeguards" for a Jewish national home in the Holy Land.

The attack followed opening of debate on the motion for approval of the government's policy by Colonial Secretary Malcolm MacDonald, who declared rejection of the policy by Arabs was the best answer to Jewish claims that it placed "Jews at the mercy of the Arab majority."

Thomas Williams, speaking for the Laborite opposition, said "the only persons whom Arabs in Palestine need fear are Arab terrorists engaged by the former Grand Mufti of Jerusalem, who has been responsible for killing off about 3,000 persons during the last year or two."

Victory for Hitler, Mussolini

"This fear argument is a mere excuse and another victory for Hitler and Mussolini and those who think as they think," Williams said.

Laborite Josiah Clement Wedgwood declared the effects in the United States of the Government's policy were "very serious."

Referring to the Anglo-American-Palestine convention of 1924—which requires the assent of the United States to any modification in the mandate and provides that "vested American property rights be respected and in no way impaired"—MacDonald said the British government was "anxious that the interests of America in that convention should be properly assured at all times in the future."

Jerusalem, May 22 (AP).—Ten thousand Jewish women, singing, shouting and carrying banner with the slogan, "We will not surrender," marched through the streets today in protest against Britain's new Palestine policy.

Eighty-year-old, Baltimore-born Henrietta Szold, founder of the American Hadassah, and the wife of Chief Rabbi Dr. Isaac Halevi Herzog, led the marchers.

Lighthouses Dark With Gloom as Merger Threatens to Put Birthday Fete on Rocks

Gloomy officials of the Lighthouse Service are afraid that the President's second reorganization plan has scuttled their program for a 150th birthday celebration which would have made similar observances perennially prepared by chief Congressional celebrant, Representative Sol Bloom, pale into insignificance.

The trouble is that although the Lighthouse Service, one of the very first Government agencies created, will be 150 years old on August 7, by that time it will be merely a minor adjunct of the Treasury Coast Guard.

The bitterest blow of all is that a birthday cake with 150 candles was close within reach of every lighthouse on America's stern and rock-bound coast, since Congress has just passed a resolution naming the week of August 7 as Lighthouse Week and appropriated $2,500 for jollifications, orations and festoons of posies. Now lighthouse officials believe it highly probable the President will veto the bill.

Founded in 1789 by the ninth law to be passed by the first Congress, the service had planned for municipal celebrations, parades, speeches, flag-waving, commemorative stamp issues and Nation-wide gamboling on the green, with grizzled veterans who man the mariners' beacons refurbishing their towers with potted plants and crepe paper for a week of open house.

Whether the Coast Guard will look with benevolent eye on the proposed party of its new acquisition was still undetermined. With a tradition of its own, it was not considered likely that the semi-military organization of the Coast Guard would countenance the jollifications of its antique child.

Lighthouse officials said they were keeping their fingers crossed and still hoped to shoot in the order for the cake and candles.

Japanese Withdraw 50 Miles in Hopeh

Shanghai, May 22 (AP).—Japanese forces were reported today to have withdrawn 50 miles in Central Hopeh Province during a week of major fighting north of Hankow.

Japanese commanders said the withdrawal was in accordance with a "completely successful" maneuver which resulted in wiping out Chinese resistance in the zone and definitely eliminating a threatened counter-attack against Hankow.

Miss Anderson, Tibbett to Sing For King Here

Colored WPA Chorus Also on Program for White House Party

Marian Anderson, colored contralto, whose last concert here was heard by 75,000, will have as her next Washington audience King George and Queen Elizabeth and 200 top-flight members of Capital officialdom.

Arrangements for Miss Anderson to sing June 8 at the White House musicale in honor of British royalty were made known yesterday at Mrs. Roosevelt's press conference. Another headliner on the all-American program will be Lawrence Tibbett.

Also included on the program are 16 square dancers from Asheville, N. C.; a WPA-trained colored chorus of 26 from Chapel Hill, N. C., and four ballad singers from Coon Creek, Ky., who made their Washington debut last season at the Folk Festival.

An Oklahoma Indian princess, Te-Ata, will be featured entertainer at the picnic to be given for Their Majesties at Hyde Park on June 11, Mrs. Roosevelt said. This event, only informal party planned for the visitors, will be held at the President's cottage. Neighbors of the Roosevelts, including Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Morgenthau, will make up the guest list.

Since the weather probably will be warm, hot dogs will not be served to Their Majesties, Mrs. Roosevelt said. Instead there will be a summer-time menu of soft drinks, beer, coffee, cold ham and sliced turkey, sandwiches, salad and probably strawberry shortcake.

"I don't know," voiced with various intonations, was Mrs. Roosevelt's stock answer to the flurry of questions about plans for entertaining the royal visitors. The First Lady said she hadn't the foggiest idea how problems of etiquette would be solved when a King and Queen of England were honor guests at an American picnic.

Schedule Not Settled

Mrs. Roosevelt has not yet been told the order in which guests at the White House dinner on June 8 will go into the dining room, and she has not yet flugred out her exact schedule for the two-day visit of Their Majesties.

She did say, however, that 90-odd invitations had gone out for the dinner, and that all guests both there and at the musicale would be from the official set, except members of the Roosevelt family.

Other bits of information dispensed at the conference indicated that:

The White House luncheon to be given for Their Majesties on the day of their arrival will be strictly "a family affair."

To Use Own Servants

Tea to be served at the Executive Mansion during the royal visit will be a Chinese brand used in the Roosevelt family for years—unless, of course, Their Majesties say they prefer some other.

The two waiters who have served the King and Queen during their Canadian tour are not expected to take over similar duties at the White House.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., who is recuperating from an illness, is still under a doctor's care and will not be at the White House during the royal visit.

Bedrooms in the White House will be provided for two Scotland Yard agents.

Gifts Being Returned

President Roosevelt is selecting the wine for the White House dinner.

A variety of gifts for the King and Queen have been forwarded to the White House, as well as suggestions on how to entertain them. The gifts are being returned.

Meanwhile the Senate passed a concurrent resolution authorizing the Senate and House to recess June 9 to meet the King and Queen of England in the rotunda of the Capitol during the royal party's visit to Washington.

Marian Anderson Ill

Chicago, May 22 (AP).—Marian Anderson was recovering today from an attack of "flu" which compelled her to cancel her engagement Saturday with the North Shore Musical Festival. She expects to be well enough to travel east within a few days.

50,000 Cheer Rulers at Races; Quee Kisses Quins

closed. Police said Healy was an unemployed war veteran.

The levee of King George and Queen Elizabeth for the five most famous children in their far-flung realm took place in the music room of the Lieutenant General's suite in the Provincial Parliament building, and quickly veered from what the program called for. The Dionne girls, who will be 5 next week, did everything but play ring-around-rosy with Their Majesties.

Each of the five lovely children, prettier than their pictures by far, went up to the Queen, put her arms around her neck and planted a moist kiss. It probably was the first time they had ever kissed a stranger.

Yvonne seemed to think that His Majesty was being neglected, so she went over and shyly gave him her hand. Marie, her own compassion aroused, then gave the King her bouquet. All the others gave theirs to the Queen.

Her Majesty, a warm-hearted woman with two little girls of her own, dropped to one knee to return the kisses of the little queens of Canada.

First Time Away From Home

It was the first time in their cloistered lives that the quintuplets had gone into the outside world, and the experience must have been more fanciful than anything they had ever heard read from fairy books. They saw men in shiny top hats and fashionable women wearing dresses in startling contrast to the starched uniforms of their nurses. They saw dragoons on prancing horses and soldiers with bearskin shakoes and fierce-looking bayonets.

And finally they saw the exalted but democratic couple whom they had been taught to call Le Roi and Le Reine.

The five sisters, not the first to be born in jack pot fashion but the only ones ever known to survive, wore white organza gowns that stretched to their toes. They wore poke bonnets of the same material but at different angles, Marie having hers all the way off the back of her head.

The children, it seems, each have a favorite color. Thus Marie had yellow rosebuds in her hair; Annette, little green flowers; Cecile, bachelor buttons; Emilie, rosebuds, while Yvonne wore a spray of heather in her hair which must have given the Queen, a Scot, nostalgia.

The Queen had on a powder blue (or Queen's blue) ensemble coat which was trimmed with sovereign silver fox; actually, this is the rather lowly red fox which has been specially treated. She wore a blue halo hat, fawn-colored shoes and an abundance of pearls, diamonds and sapphires.

Quins Behave Nicely

The King wore his undress naval uniform—distinguished from the dress by the absence of the fore-and-aft hat with plume—a uniform which he doffed to put on cutaway and black topper for the races later in the day.

Dr. Allan R. Dafoe, who brought the children into the world, was reported to be concerned lest the children get too rambunctious before Their Majesties.

As it turned out, they were wonderfully behaved, even if they did depart from the program by kissing the Queen. She returned smack for smack.

The sisters had been carefully schooled in the technique of making curtsies, but no one had anticipated that they would hug the Queen and kiss her. The children were in the music room before Their Majesties arrived. They were far more composed than Dr. Dafoe, their parents and nurses.

King George and Queen Elizabeth entered the room with Premier Mitchell Hepburn, who took the royal couple over and presented Dr. Dafoe. The doctor in turn presented the nurses and then Papa and Mamma Dionne. This was done, it was explained, because if the order of introductions had been otherwise—had the girls come first—Their Majesties would never have had a chance to meet the nurses and the parents.

The children, who had been seated on chesterfields, were summoned to the royal presence. They curtsied as they had been taught to do, naturally and gracefully.

King Jokes With Yvonne

Yvonne, Marie, Annette, Cecile and Emilie threw their arms around the Queen's neck and kissed her, to be hugged and kissed in return. Then Yvonne, who some day will be a gracious hostess, thought of the King and went over and gave him her hand. The King bent down and whispered in her ear and Yvonne thought that was delightful. She and the King joined in a shout of laughter at the private joke.

The quintuplets gave the King and Queen autographed pictures of themselves, and the Queen presented each of them with a blue coat which had been brought over from London.

Queen Elizabeth talked to Mrs. Dionne in French, telling her about her own two daughters, the Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose in London. The King talked to Mr. Dionne, who appeared in an ordinary business suit.

Meantime, in the Parliament chamber, a momentous announcement was made to the statesmen, the distinguished guests and the Victoria Cross wearers who had seen the King and Queen enter a short time before.

"You have just seen the reigning Queen of the Empire," said Maj. James Clark, speaker of the house and a resplendent figure in his tricornered hat. "Now you will see the five queens of Canada." Those present were asked not to applaud, to sit in absolute silence and to pay as little attention as possible to the entrance of the quintuplets.

A moment later the strangest procession ever to be seen in that galleried, red-tapestried hall of Parliament came along. In the lead was Premier Hepburn and Mrs. Hepburn, smiling and proud. Then came Dr. Dafoe with his white hair and close cropped mustache. Behind them came the vivacious quintuplets, two of them holding hands with Papa and Mamma Dionne and three with the white-capped nurses.

Little Marie, the last in line, began to blow kisses from her gloved palm. The others, seeing this, burst into laughter, and they began to wave to the audience.

This, like every other visit on the the royal tour, was a day every minute of which was taken up with action for Their Majesties. On their arrival, they were greeted by a 21-gun royal salute. Then came a parade through 25 miles of crowd-lined, festooned streets—a "lane of devotion," as Toronto proclaimed. Chinatown, home of 3,000 Orientals, had its own welcome sign out, emblazoned with the Union Jack and the Chinese emblem.

Something happened during the day that seemed strange in Toronto, particularly since it is described as the most imperialistic of Canadian cities, a city made up largely of English, Scotch and Irish. In a downtown restaurant, just after Their Majesties had passed, a man said: "Why all this hullabaloo for the King? After all, he is only a figurehead."

He said it loud enough to be heard across the room, and about ten men jumped on him and almost tore him to pieces. Women, too, joined in the attack, one of them going after him with a chair.

The emotional pull of the visit of the King and Queen is tremendous. This reporter, nurtured on textbooks which excoriated the Red Coats of 1776, has been moved by it as well as all the other Yanks traveling on the royal pilot train.

The atmosphere can't very well be compared with that in Washington, say, during a Presidential inauguration, because always on such occasions there are people who didn't agree with the verdict at the polls and who are inclined to sulk. There are no sulkers where the King and Queen are concerned—only glad-eyed, flag-waving admirers.

French-Canadians Cheer

French Canadians and Anglo-Canadians, who are inclined to quarrel at other times, stand along the sidelines and cheer Their Majesties, and so it is with other sometimes antagonistic groups.

What is it? An American necessarily has to turn to a Canadian, who in this case will be the editor of the Ottawa Journal. This morning he wrote:

"George the King and Elizabeth his Queen remind us of a mighty past, a brave present, a future that is what we make of it."

It is a fact, too, that the word has flown ahead that the King and Queen are a friendly couple and well worth seeing on their own account. In tthe case of the Queen, the eulogies continue to mount. The English say she is "charming," the French that she is "chic." Old men say that she makes them feel young again.

The Canadian newspaper reporters who write about how wonderful she is—how much nicer she is than her photographs would indicate—feel constrained sometimes to add hastily that the King is quite a fellow also. It really isn't necessary. The King thinks his Queen is pretty wonderful, too. You ought to see him look at her, and she at him, when there are no crowds around.

Tonight the King and Queen are aboard their silver and blue royal train, heading north around the Great Lakes on their way west.

Uniform Wins Marie

Back in Callander tonight Doctor Dafoe happily discussed the royal audience.

"The quints were remarkable," he mused.

The doctor revealed that Marie had fallen in love with the King, but pointed out that blue was her favorite color and that maybe" she went for the King's blue navy uniform."

"Marie played with the King's gold braid and asked all about his medals," said Dr. Dafoe. "The King answered all her questions and seemed to enjoy himself immensely."

The Dionnes were somewhat disappointed that the six brothers and sisters of the quints, who had accompanied them to Toronto, could not attend the royal audience, but Papa Dionne was proud that the King had spoken with him twice. Mrs. Dionne exclaimed that the King and Queen had impressed her as "very royal, but very nice."

Tanks for King? British Surprised

planes overhead brought sharp criticism from several quarters.

Looking at it from a military standpoint, there is a paradox involved here somewhere. What is a tank? Is it not a modern, mechanized version of the cavalry? Would there, then, be the same cry of "too militaristic" if a troop of cavalry had been used for President Somoza? The chances are against it.

There is something romantic about the cavalry, something that stirs up the emotions and yet causes the onlooker to forget that the cavalry has been engaged in some of the bloodiest warfare in all history.

This thought occurs in connection with the welcome given King George and Queen Elizabeth at Montreal. Three magnificant military units formed an honor guard for their majesties at the Jean Talon Station. They were the kilted Black Watch, the Fusiliers Mount Royal with their bearskin shakoes and red tunics, and the Duke of York's Royal Canadian Hussars.

These hussars, mounted on black horses and carrying lances with pennants, wore uniforms that seemed strange and yet familiar. A Montreal policeman explained this. The uniforms, he said, were the same as those worn by the hussars who fought at Balaklava and were immortalized by Tennyson in his "Charge of the Light Brigade."

In Ottawa, the King and Queen were escorted by a cavalry outfit which, for sheer brilliance, must be in a class by itself. This is the Princess Louise Dragoon Guards. They wear brass helmets that gleam in the sun, carry gaily decorated lances, and ride horses that look like derb favorites.

Thus far, however, there has been no mechanized armament, no tanks, no scout cars, of anything smacking of modern warfare used in any of the receptions for the King and Queen. The appeal has been to the eye and to the memory of a glorious past. Nothing suggestive of the "next war" has been seen.

The King himself, of course, is the most dazzling figure of all when he is in uniform, which is about half the time. He has a good figure and looks well in whatever he wears.

In a spine-tingling ceremony called "trooping the colors," at Ottawa, the young King-Emperor wore a guards uniform with a bearskin busbie that must have been two feet high. A strap across his chin almost hid his face.

They say that he likes his naval uniforms best, and that would be only natural. He is a sailor-King, an honest-to-goodness war veteran who served in a turret of H. M. S. Collingwood in the great battle of Jutland.

In Washington he will be the guest of a man who loves the sea above all else; who, as a boy, wanted to go to Annapolis, and who now heads for blue water whenever he gets the chance. The two of them—the King and the President—should therefore have no trouble breaking the conversational ice.

King Will See All Kinds of Red In This Town

Vancouver, B. C., May 22 (INS).—Vancouver members of the Dominion committee organizing a welcome for King George and Queen Elizabeth on their tour of Canada are harvesting a wealth of knowledge concerning welcoming problems.

Particularly amusing is the plight of a small prairie town which was advised by Ottawa officials to cover the station platform with a red carpet during the brief stop of the royal train.

Short of funds with which to purchase a new carpet, the town officials are preparing to use red carpets from the town churches. As advices state no two of the carpets are the same shade of red the committee fears the result will be a color scheme that will make their majesties dizzy.

Halifax Held Urging Closer Tie to Russia

Reported Ready to Submit New Plan To British Cabinet

By the Associated Press.

Geneva, May 22.—Soviet Russia tonight was understood to be standing firm in demands for a closer form of agreement or alliance than had been proposed by Britain to bring the U. S. S. R. into the British-French front.

Faced with Russian insistence on a closer understanding, British Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax was said to be planning to submit a three-point plan Wednesday to the cabinet in London.

[The cabinet is expected to approve the tripower alliance in principle, The Post's special correspondent cabled from London. This dispatch said Chamberlain and his colleagues were believed to have resolved to sweep aside technical details and agree forthwith to an outright alliance.—editor's note.]

Terms of the plan were said to have been evolved during conferences among Lord Halifax, Ivan Maisky, Soviet Ambassador to London, and French Foreign Minister Bonnet which have taken Geneva's limelight from the 105th session of the Council of the League of Nations.

Maisky smilingly rejected all suggestions, it was said, that his country should be content with less than the form of pact which he asked despite the last-minute efforts of Bonnet.

Automatic Aid in War

There were said to be three points of the Halifax project:

That the three powers come to each other's aid automatically if any of the three is attacked directly.

That if any state guaranteed by the signatory powers is attacked and asks help the three signatories give immediate aid.

That if any signatory considers an act of aggression against a state not guaranteed as affecting its own interests there shall be tri-power consultations to decide if aid should be given and what form it should take.

The plan may include separate regional agreements. The first point would cover Russia's demands, the second would take care of Turkey, Rumania, Poland and Greece and the third would cover the Baltic States.

League Council Sidesteps

The League Council, meanwhile, successfully sidestepped two thorny questions, but at a public session this afternoon China's Dr. V. K. Wellington Koo brought up a third: As usual, he asked for League action against Japan and as usual seemed to have little chance of getting it.

The issue of whether exiled Zog or Vittorio Emanuele of Italy was King of Albania was passed on to the Assembly.

An appeal by Dr. Eduard Benes, former president of Czecho-Slovakia, for League intercession against partition of his vanished state was referred to a committee with the possibility that it may never emerge.

Toller, Anti-Nazi Poet, Hangs Self

but left it when 'a loud-mouthed little squirt' virtually took it over. He referred to Reichsfuehrer Hitler, whom Toller met during their early political activity."

Toller, a Jew, left Germany while Hitler was rising to power. His books were burned by Nazis, and, he said, his family and many friends and associates were abused by storm troopers.

Joseph Freeman, a writer and companion of Toller, said the author had assisted the Madrid government forces during the Spanish civil war and until the time of his death was active in trying to assist prisoners in Spain.

"Only a couple of nights ago" said Freeman, "Toller called up many of his friends to try to get help for 80 Germans captured by Franco. He said Franco was going to send them back to Germany now, but that it would be more merciful to shoot them outright."

Manfred George, president of the German-American Writers Society and close friend of Toller, said the dramatist's only relative in the United States was his widow, Christina Grautoff, now in Hollywood. He said Toller had taken passage preparatory to sailing for Europe Wednesday.

Toller, who served 13 months with the German army in the World War before being invalided out, was in Switzerland when Hitler came into power in 1933. He later went to England and became a British subject. He has been in the United States since 1936.

Among his dramas which were translated into English were "Man and the Masses," "The Machine Wreckers," "Transfiguration," "Hoppla," "Such Is Life," "Mary Baker Eddy" (in collaboration with Herman Kesten), "The Blind Goddess," "Draw the Fires," "Miracle in America" (with Kesten), "Hinkemann."

Visited in Capital

Last December Toller, while visiting in Washington, proposed a huge pool of surplus goods from the world democracies to feed and clothe the impoverished civilians of Loyalist and Nationalist Spain. He revealed his plan to the State Department.

D. C. Observes Maritime Day; Training Ship Commissioned

The several hundred Congressmen, Government officials and other invited guests who attended the celebration of National Maritime Day at the Washington Navy Yard yesterday beheld a spectacle symbolic of the heyday of the American merchant marine and the present effort to restore it.

Tied up at the Navy Yard dock was the Government training ship, Joseph Conrad, an old square rigger reminiscent of the days when Yankee sailing vessels roamed the seven seas. And towering alongside was the American Seaman, newest addition to the Maritime Service's fleet and described as the finest and best-equipped training vessel in the world.

The latter was formally commissioned yesterday, and will sail tomorrow on its maiden voyage to train young Americans for the new merchant marine now building, which officials hope will lead the world. With the 7,000-ton former freighter—one of the largest vessels ever to come up the Potomac to Washington—will go the little 212-ton sailing ship.

Today, however, both vessels will remain on view. With the Pennsylvania State school ship Annapolis, an old vessel which bridges the gap between the modern American Seaman and the romantic old Joseph Conrad, they will be open to the public from 9 a. m. until 7 p. m. And lest this exhibit is not enough to coax blase Washingtonians, officials state that visitors may see, although not board, President Roosevelt's yacht, the Potomac.

Although observed for years in seaboard cities, yesterday was Washington's first National Maritime Day. Besides the commissioning of the American Seaman, the occasion enabled officials of the Maritime Commission to show Congress the progress they have made in building a new merchant marine. To the members of the Senate Commerce Committee, House Merchant Marine Committee and Senate and House Labor Committees, a tour of inspection of the new ship and personal talks with the student-seamen and officers were far better than a dry-as-dust official report.

Senator Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina, chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, spoke at the luncheon aboard the American Seaman. He told a Nation-wide radio audience that the United States is now second to Great Britain in building merchant ships, and intends to match the world in both ships and men. He praised President Roosevelt for "boldly leading the way" in the program and paid tribute to the late Senator Royal S. Copeland for his work in making it possible.

Congress to Weigh Creation of Giant Telegraph Trust

By International News Service.

A full Congressional investigation of the telegraph industry, with a view of enacting legislation permitting establishment of a giant monopoly in that field yesterday was approved by both the Administration and the two major domestic companies.

The Western Union and the Postal Telegraph might be consolidated in one of the mergers under consideration, the benefits of which would be explored by the inquiry.

Attorney General Murphy and Secretary of Commerce Hopkins indorsed a "careful study" of the telegraphic branch of communications.

Officials of Western Union and Postal Telegraph have themselves welcomed a Government inquiry. Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, sponsor of a resolution to authorize the investigation, told a Senate Interstate Commerce subcommittee.

A Let-Down For D. C.

Civic Washington will probably greet the reappointment of George E. Allen to the Board of Commissioners with a sign of disappointment. That sigh will carry no personal reflection upon Mr. Allen. But it will register widespread disapproval of the tactics used by President Roosevelt to bring about the much-needed reorganization of the District government.

Mr. Allen has many friends in Washington. In the years that he served the District as Commissioner he won the good will of the community. But it can scarcely be said that he made any substantial contribution toward a solution of the District's major problems. He, along with the other Commissioners, allowed the Prettyman report to die without even submitting the recommendations to Congress. So it is mystifying to find the President begging for his return as a key man in the local reorganization movement.

Since the insurance company of which Mr. Allen is now vice president has granted only a "short-term loan" of his services, it is taken for granted that he will resign once more after a few months. If Congress passes a bill to modernize the local government at this session, Mr. Allen may have time during his brief stay to direct the realignment of departments, bureaus and independent agencies. But what point is there in asking a man, who is not an expert in governmental organization, to help devise a system which he does not intend to operate? Some thought should have been given, also, to the real possibility that enactment of a District reorganization bill will not be completed at this session.

Perhaps the most disheartening aspect of this appointment, however, is the implication that the President did not try to find a highly competent local citizen willing to assume leadership of the movement for better municipal government in Washington for more than a short period. Thus the reappointment of Mr. Allen falls like a wet blanket upon the efforts of many civic groups to effect far-reaching reforms. It suggests that the President is thinking of this vital task of District reorganization chiefly in terms of pleasant personalities.

In face of this move it is difficult to believe that the President is taking seriously the District's appeal for responsible community government.

Control Over Aircraft

Two air accidents in nearby Maryland on Sunday raise a sharp question as to whether safety regulations are properly enforced in the case of private flying. Strict rules and regulations to safeguard both passengers and pilots have been laid down by the Civil Aeronautics Authority, and in interstate flying they are rigorously enforced. But in the operation of private aircraft within State boundaries safety precautions are often lacking.

No plane can be used for interstate flying until it has been thoroughly inspected by the CAA and its airworthiness affirmed by the issuance of a certificate. Likewise, no private flier is allowed to carry a passenger across a State line until he has had at least 35 hours of solo flying. Pilots of sightseeing planes, under the CAA rules, must have had at least 60 hours of solo flight.

Theoretically, these rules are enforced in intrastate as well as interstate flying in most parts of the country. A large majority of the States have enacted legislation forbidding the operation of planes that do not meet CAA requirements and denying pilots the right to fly without the requisite CAA certificates. The desirability of making these rules uniform throughout the Nation is obvious. Even when that is done, however, the question of enforcing safety regulations will need to be reconsidered.

While it is unlawful in most of the States for incompetent pilots to take to the air in defective or worn-out planes, very few of the States have made adequate provision for enforcement of that law. As a practical matter, the States can scarcely be expected to maintain expert plane inspection staffs and pilot-examining agencies. Far better results would doubtless be obtained if the entire responsibility of licensing aircraft and pilots were left to the CAA.

That, of course, would involve surrender by the States of control over air traffic within their own boundaries. Because of the great mobility of aircraft, however, this right seems to be of little moment compared with the advantage of uniform safety requirements. As the use of private aircraft increases, in connection with the Government's plan of training a large number of pilots, the logic of turning over the regulation of all flying to the CAA will probably become increasingly apparent.

Nor is it certain that the States would lose anything by making this concession to safety and efficiency. By relinquishing minor powers which they cannot satisfactorily exercise, the States strengthen their hold upon functions that are clearly within their range of responsibility.

Axis Into Alliance

The conclusion yesterday of an outright alliance between Germany and Italy comes as an anti-climax. The move has long been anticipated. For some time, in fact, the axis partners have been acting as allies, despite the absence of formal diplomatic commitments. They now propose to do so openly.

It would be a mistake, however, to minimize the importance of this development. It is a milestone, and a significant one, in European history. At the very least, transformation of the axis into an alliance terminates the hopes, long entertained in London and Paris, of driving a wedge between Hitler and Mussolini. At most, the development signalizes the creation of a well-disciplined bloc of 150,000,000 people, living in an area extending from the Baltic to the Indian Ocean, and united not only on ideological lines but also by a common ambition to extend their present frontiers.

Singly, neither Germany nor Italy is in a position to challenge the western democracies and their allies. Together the totalitarian states occupy a more formidable position. No doubt it was the psychological importance of this well-understood fact that led Berlin and Rome to underline the obvious nature of their present relationship. Even more than the axis, the German-Italian alliance may prove a useful weapon of intimidation.

But the alliance is not merely an instrument of pressure. It also admittedly looks to the day when either or both of the partners may be at war. Then, under the terms as published, one contracting partner "will immediately rally" to the side of the other and "support him with all his military resources on land, at sea and in the air." This pledge, it will be noted, contains no qualifications. It applies to offensive as well as to defensive wars. In the meantime, Germany and Italy are determined to "deepen their co-operation in the realm of the military and in the realm of war economy."

This latter provision may, perhaps, prove the most significant of any to be found in the published text of the German-Italian alliance. For, in effect, it means that Germany will now have carte blanche to penetrate Italian economy and to dovetail Italy's military, naval and air forces with her own. In such a partnership the stronger is certain to dominate the weaker.

The alliance, therefore, means the end of the axis. As long as Germany and Italy were bound together only by this metaphysical link, the latter continued to enjoy at least a relative freedom of movement. The possibility that she might desert the axis gave Italy some control over the policies of her partner. That freedom and that influence have now been destroyed.

Italy from now on becomes the spearpoint of a coalition which is directed from Berlin. In a much less spectacular form than was true in the case of Austria and Czecho-Slovakia, it can now be said that Italy has been incorporated into the Third Reich.

Birth And Birthright

A fascinated world heard yesterday how seven of its greatest celebrities—the King and Queen of England and the five Dionnes of Callander—had come together at Toronto. But there must have been many who reflected that, save for accidents of birth, each of these seven would almost certainly have been destined to a life of relative obscurity.

That is to say, had King George and Queen Elizabeth been born under much the same biological circumstances but into less extraordinary households, it would not have occurred to anybody that they were important enough to meet the five famous Dionnes. Or had the Dionnes been born into the same household but under more commonplace circumstances, the Canadian government would certainly not have shipped them by special train for presentation to the King and Queen.

The idea of some association between rank and birth is apparently ineradicable from the human mind. It is, of course, a purely metaphysical notion, undemonstrable by any process of measurement. Even in the heyday of hereditary monarchy nobody, not even Louis XVI, pretended there was anything very tangible about the divinity that hedged a king.

All the revolutionary tides that have swept over dynasties and washed away hereditary aristocracies have not destroyed this idea of social rank by birth. They have merely rearranged the values. In Russia, for example, great store is set upon "proletarian origin" and even in America we have something like a eugenical caste system with the Adamses and Edwardses at one end and the Jukes and the Kalikaks at the other. In Germany, of course, as much importance is now placed upon "Aryan birth" as ever was placed on "gentle birth" in feudal times.

Under the system of social station according to biologic fissiparism quintuplets naturally outrank quadruplets by about the same degree that kings and queens outrank dukes and duchesses. Thus the congratulatory cablegram sent to the Dionnes by the quadruplets of St. Neots, England, was quite properly couched in the respectful language of vassals to their liege ladies.

Passing Of The Boss

American Democracy has always been easy-going with the old-school political boss. Because their corruption was usually confined by discretion; because they were customarily genial and even tender-hearted ruffians, these curious personalities have for decades been allowed a large allotment of rope. Periodic reform movements contested and occasionally hampered their power. But until recently the boss had it pretty much his own way in his own limited sphere.

The sentencing of Tom Pendergast in Kansas City, only two months after that of Jimmy Hines in New York, indicates that this period of complacency is at an end. Taken together the two convictions mean much more than local or haphazard attacks on municipal misgovernment. They indicate, rather, the final passing of the era which produced the boss.

The traditional machine leader conformed to an easily-recognized pattern. He was a wholly uneducated but shrewd and ruthless man who by a combination of personality, luck and civic indifference gradually gained command over the dispensation of municipal contracts and patronage. The typical boss had no social standing in his community and was generally anathema to all its leading citizens. But his power was none the less real for that.

Men of this type customarily break themselves. Having no intellectual interests and no ideals, they turn to more or less vicious pastimes and eventually pass unhonored from the scene. That they should do so with a minimum of scandal, after yielding their authority to lieutenants of the same type, was for decades accepted practice in nearly every big American city. Government of, by and for the underworld was deplored. But so long as it was practiced with reasonable restraint few people greatly cared.

Tom Pendergast and Jimmy Hines are probably no worse and no more vicious than many of their prototypes, who lived much the same way but safely eluded the none too muscular clutches of the law. The difference is not in the men but in the age. Whether it be New York or Kansas City, American communities now have too much self-respect to be run on gutter lines by racetrack gamblers. It is that growth in municipal self-respect, apparent even in disfranchised Washington, which has doomed the boss.

Jimmy Hines and Tom Pendergast outlived their time. We shall not, fortunately, look upon many of their like again. Ignorant and uncouth figures, yet touched with a certain appealing piratical flavor, they were creatures of an easy civilization in which neither brains nor honor nor even honesty was demanded or expected in local government.

That halcyon period, if it was such, is gone forever.

Distance Barrier Down

Of all the obstacles which, in the past, stood in the way of better understanding between the people of the United States and those of the republics south of us, the barrier of distance was perhaps the most important.

For instance, before the cutting of the Panama Canal, the west coast of South America could be reached from our eastern seaboard only after a tedious voyage of weeks or months. And while the canal did bring us very much closer to the Andean republics, as late as 1929 Santiago was still three weeks distant from Washington by the fastest combination of railroad and steamship communications.

Since then, however, the picture has changed very much for the better. Just ten years ago last week the first international air service south of Panama was established by an American firm, Pan American-Grace Airways. Originally operated once a week with mail only, this system of air communications was soon extended to include passengers and express. The routes were lengthened and flying time was cut down. Buenos Aires, as a result, is now but four and a half days away from New York.

In shrinking distances between the two continents of the western world, the airplane has been a real messenger of good will and a creator of inter-American understanding. The tenth anniversary of the inter-American air service finds United States firms operating more planes in Latin America than those of any other nationality. Moreover, the American planes are operating with greater frequency and over greater route mileage and doing it with a remarkable coefficient of safety.

Moral Rearmament

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It did me good to read your editorial of May 16 on "Moral Rearmament," and I want you to know it.

It may be true that all editors realize that the basis of democracy rests in certain age-old principles; that its strength lies in the quality of its citizens; that its crying need is not so much to be defended as to be lived. But it is rare that they give expression to these truths with the force and conviction of your editorial.

I was present at that Madison Square Garden meeting and I realized that here is "raised a standard to which the wise and the honest can repair," to quote George Washington. May I add my own impression, that moral rearmament is here, an actuality in many lives and families and countries. The question is not whether it will come, but how soon, and how far.

APPRECIATIVE READER.
Washington, May 21.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your recent editorials on "Conscience or Duty" and on "Moral Rearmament" struck a valuable note in stressing the part that individuals can take in making democracy work. I am more and more convinced that individuals living out their deepest spiritual convictions are the keystone to a nation's strength. From such people will come the type of leadership that can bring peace and make it permanent.

I want to thank you, too, for printing several news stories of moral rearmament in recent weeks. I have heard a great deal of favorable comment on this type of news.

Educational Directory

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have just been looking at the Directory of Educational and Recreational Opportunities which has just been circulated through the generosity of your newspaper.

It will be useful to countless people who have felt sure this wonderful city must have just the opportunity for improvement which their hearts desired but who knew not how to dig out the salient information. You are now giving it to them in a nutshell.

It is to be hoped that the co-operating organizations will keep this information current and that you will issue a new edition each year.

"City Of Contrasts"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to compliment The Washington Post for the superlative effort put forth by Mr. Eugene Pharo in the current series of articles associated with publication of the Council of Social Agencies' spot maps.

As an excellent piece of work in the field of community evaluation, these articles rank first, in my opinion, among all those appearing in the press currently.

Savings, Investment And Prosperity

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Last Saturday, under the heading "Crux of the Recovery Problem," Walter Lippmann called attention to the extremely important testimony of Prof. Hansen and Dr. Currie before the Monopoly Committee. As he says, this testimony has done much to make clear the problem of recovery.

It should be pointed out that so far the committee has approached the problem from the investment side only. The conclusion that 18 billions of capital investment is needed for prosperity is true only if the volume of savings under prosperity conditions amounts to about 18 billions a year. If our people were to save 10 per cent instead of 20 per cent of their incomes, then the amount of new investment needed would be only about 9 billions to maintain prosperity after it had been achieved.

It is true that to solve the problem we must invest all our savings; but investment may be made equal to savings by reducing savings as well as by increasing investment. This obvious fact has not been given the consideration it deserves.

As the President pointed out in his recent letter to the TNEC, we may have entered an era of more gradual growth in which industry will need less new capital than in earlier decades. In this case, instead of attempting to increase investment to the abnormally high level of the twenties, it would surely be wiser to take measures to reduce savings to the level of needed investment.

The committee will doubtless make a thorough study of various methods for reducing savings. However, I would like to call attention to the method which seems the most direct and effective, namely, a tax on underspendings. By underspendings is meant uninvested savings; savings which are not invested in new goods; savings which are hoarded or exchanged for securities or other old assets; income which is not put back into circulation by the receiver.

Since the tax would exempt savings invested in new capital goods, means would have to be provided for distinguishing new investments from other investments. It is proposed that securities issued by corporations to finance expansion be stamped "new investment" upon proper authorization by the SEC; also that banks be authorized to sell "new investment certificates" up to the amount they lend for new construction and similar expenditures.

Original purchasers of stamped securities and of certificates would be exempt from tax on the invested savings. Social security, annuity and insurance payments would naturally be exempt to a limited extent, and also amounts used to repay loans previously incurred for goods and houses.

The proposed tax would be a powerful stimulant to business just where it needs it most; for stamped securities and certificates would sell at a premium, enabling business to obtain funds for new construction and expansion at a discount. Moreover, the tax would in no case be a burden to business, since any corporation could avoid it by either distributing all savings to stockholders or by using them for expansion.

Incidentally, the tax would supply badly needed data as to the amount of annual savings in this country, data which are lacking at present but which we must have if we are to control our national income and prevent depression.

Russian Diplomacy

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a recent editorial entitled "Russian Diplomacy," dealing with the current negotiations between Great Britain and the Soviet Union with respect to erecting a united peace front against the aggressor Rome-Berlin axis, The Post introduces its views by stating that "a curious editorial was published yesterday by the Moscow paper, Izvestia."

I have read Izvestia's editorial very carefully and I fail to see wherein it is curious. It seems to me, as I am sure it would seem to every open-minded reader, a very direct and clear statement of the correct attitude of the Soviet government regarding the building of world peace.

The Post states that Izvestia's editorial makes clear that "Russia is none too anxious to align herself with Great Britain, France, Poland, and Rumania in a concerted action to check further aggression on the part of the Rome-Berlin axis." This is misrepresentation by the Post. The Soviet Union is not only anxious to align herself with all powers sincerely working to organize world peace, but she has repeatedly taken the lead in this direction, both after and before the tragedy of Munich, by her urgent advocacy of collective security.

There is nothing curious about the way Izvestia's editorial puts the situation: "Great Britain's suggestions avoid the subject of a pact of mutual assistance between Great Britain, France and the U. S. S. R., and consider that the Soviet government should come to the immediate aid of Great Britain and France, should they be involved in hostilities as a result of fulfillment of the obligations they have assumed in guaranteeing Poland and Rumania."

"Great Britain says nothing about the aid which the U. S. S. R. should naturally receive on the principle of reciprocity from France and Great Britain should it be involved in hostilities as a result of the fulfillment of the obligations it may assume in guaranteeing any of the states of eastern Europe.

"It thus follows that under this arrangement the U. S. S. R. must find itself in a position of inequality, although it would assume exactly the same obligations as France and Great Britain. Where there is no reciprocity, no real collaboration can be brought about."

"Something Is Wrong"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Congress now in session is supposed to perform surgery upon several New Deal laws which have not proved workable. The President admitted that a few acts must be modified, yet Congressmen seem so perturbed concerning the neutrality act and in endeavoring to prevent entanglement in foreign affairs that very little is being accomplished in legislation.

The best interest of the Nation demands a change in the wage-hour law, the labor relation act and "friction taxes" which prove a deterrent to business. Also, the present relief policy and continued spending in excess of receipts may have dire consequences.

The assertion is made that the United States is the only great nation which has a problem of unemployment, a surplus production and more capital than it now knows how to use.

Something is manifestly wrong. Has some subtle thing secretly destroyed our native independence, and invented a false security? The Government cannot long continue to expend large sums under conditions that now exist, without inviting disaster. Should a crisis arise, it is not inconceivable that a changed form of society might result, probably some form of collectivism. WALTER I. PRIEST.

The Post Impressionist

Night Nurse

MISS GILBERT yawned as she sat at the small desk in the dimly lighted hall. Her head rested on her left hand and with her right she made notations on a clinical chart. The words blurred before her eyes. She shook her head, and when her eyes opened wide enough to make out what she had written, she found she had wandered off the lines. She had written the same thing several times. What her unconscious hand had scribbled did not pertain to the patient but to a thought Miss Gilbert had when she dozed off. The chart would have to be copied on a fresh sheet.

"I think," said Miss Gilbert to herself, "if that woman (she had named her Mrs. Roland Toss) doesn't go to sleep soon, I'm going crazy. She's had two allonals and still she keeps saying, 'Nursie, I can't go to sleep; I don't know what's the matter with me.'

"Can't go to sleep! Ten dollars would be cheap for a bed at 2 o'clock in the morning. Just ten minutes to stretch out on a bed would be worth a million, and Mrs. Roland Toss can't go to sleep."

Picking up the flashlight from the desk, Nurse Gilbert hastened noiselessly down the corridor. If 15 had made up her mind to stay awake all night, that was perfectly all right with 'Nursie.' (Lord, how she hated that word!) She opened the door with a jerk, and then, as if ashamed of this gesture of rebellion, she closed it with extreme care.

Miss Gilbert passed through the first room to the left and entered the long screened-in porch. Not a sound here. The moon was very bright, flooding the floor, and she was grateful for the shadows that took form and danced about her feet as she tiptoed silently past the still, sleeping figures. Someone at the far end began coughing.

A hand shot out from under the bed covers. Sure enough, Mrs. Roland Toss in 15.

"Nursie!" The nurse held her breath. Did the woman want to wake up everyone on the porch?

"Sh-sh; you must whisper, ple-ase." She put a forefinger to her lips.

"All right, but I can't go to sleep."

That's too bad; did you lie still like I told you to?"

"Yes, I did. What time is it?"

"Two," the nurse replied.

"What time?" Mrs. Roland Toss cupped her ear in her hand.

Miss Gilbert flashed her light on her left wrist, but Mrs. Roland Toss couldn't read the dial without her glasses and they were in one of her bags in the closet. Finally, Miss Gilbert held two fingers under the patient's nose and Mrs. Roland Toss nodded understandingly.

"My goodness! . . ."

"Sh-sh."

Mrs. Roland Toss pushed herself up in bed, drawing the covers about her neck disgustedly. A great sigh escaped her.

"I thought it must be at least 5 o'clock," she said. "Maybe, if you open that door, I can go to sleep. I'm not used to having the door shut at home."

"O. K. I'll leave the door open."

Sleep was slowly creeping into Miss Gilbert's eyes and she was cursing the idea of any human being having to stay on duty 12 hours at a stretch, when she saw faintly a flash of red. She opened her eyes fully and there was 15's light. She was almost grateful for its being on; now she would have to get up and walk.

It was not Mrs. Roland Toss, but Mrs. Woodward Wells, who shared the room. She wondered if Miss Gilbert would shut the door; there was a draft on her shoulder. The door was shut. The nurse heard a movement in Mrs. Roland Toss' direction and went over to see if she were asleep. That good lady was very much awake.

"I've just decided why I can't go to sleep." She cocked her head to one side and went on, "It's my alarm clock. I haven't got it, and at home I always sleep with it right beside my bed."

"Oh, I see," the nurse said, "we'll see if we can get you one tomorrow."

How, Nurse Gilbert thought, could anyone so hard of hearing possibly be lulled to sleep by the tick of a clock. Oh, well, she'd see that Mrs. Roland Toss had a clock if she had to bring her own.

The next night, after listening to the report by the day supervisor, Miss Gilbert hastened to 15 and triumphantly presented her clock to Mrs. Roland Toss. That querulous patient's joy knew no limits until she discovered that the clock's dial had no radium as had hers at home.

But it was a clock and she kept it.

It was 1 o'clock the next morning. Fifteen's light was registered. With a sigh of utter hopelessness, Miss Gilbert picked up her flashlight. But Mrs. Roland Toss was sleeping soundly. It was Mrs. Woodward Wells.

"I can't go to sleep. That clock's ticking makes so much noise it keeps me awake," she whispered.

"All right, I'll take it away," said the nurse as she tucked the clock under her arm. Mrs. Roland Toss was snoring gently.

Miss Gilbert sat down at the desk in the hall and gathered up the scattered charts. The clock did make an awful noise. She picked it up, took it into the utility room, wrapped a towel around it and set it on the shelf. Wrapping the thing didn't stop the loud ticking, and Miss Gilbert was wondering what to do with it.

She glanced at the watch on her wrist. It was 1:30 a. m. Time to clean the medicine chest. She noticed that 15 was registered again.

"The clock is gone," said Mrs. Roland Toss.

American Sweeps

ACCORDING TO my figures, which are brewed by the old expense account formula and therefore are subject to slight errors one way or the other, the Irish Hospitals lottery is losing ground in this country. In the current drawing on the English Derby, Americans bought $4,047,550 worth of legitimate tickets, and if the same rate be maintained in the other two draws of this year the American trade will be a little more than $12,000,000; a decline from an annual volume of $21,000,000 a few years ago. Of course, Americans also buy a number of counterfeit tickets and a number of genuine tickets which might as well be counterfeit because the agents simply steal the money. If the agent doesn't send the stub and the cash to Dublin the person who bought the ticket doesn't get a run for his money and there is nothing but his conscience and the fear of a good bust in the nose to compel an agent to do the right thing. However, there is no way of guessing how much money Americans lose in this way, and I mention the matter only to show how very shrewd and cynical I am.

American Sweeps Are Not New

I HAVE NO idea why the Irish Sweep is declining here and can't even toy with the thought that American Sweeps are growing more numerous and absorbing the play which the Irish are losing because I am not sure the American Sweeps, which I am only now hearing about, haven't been running for a long time. The fact that I am just learning about them needn't mean they are new. In fact, I know that the official Puerto Rican lottery is more than five years old and that the three which operate in Shenandoah, Pa., and another in Mahanoy City are old enough to be regarded as regional institutions, although my information doesn't include their respective dates of origin.

More recently, in response to my rather wide-eyed surprise at learning that such things could be in the United States, I have received a circular reporting the prize winners of a lottery conducted by a Bridgeport, Conn., chapter of a national organization of war veterans which appears to be run off once a week and pay a capital prize of $500. There is also information of a hot one operated by another chapter of the same veterans' outfit at Nanuet and Tuckahoe, N. Y. This one has two offices, shoves tickets in both communities, which are, in a loose way of speaking, right in Jim Farley's own yard, and holds its dance, which is the occasion for the awarding of the prizes, in the fire hall in Nanuet. The capital prize in the distribution of April 19 was $2,500, followed by one $500 prize, one of $200, three of $100 each, three $50s, five $30s and so on down to a list of 169 individual winners of $10 each. With the prizes for ticket sellers, the distribution amounted to $7,000 on April 19, and there was another drawing on May 17, the result of which I do not know.

Boasts Of Running Since April, 1935

THE LIST gives the names and addresses of the winners, but the prospectus says nothing about the purpose for which the profits are used. However, that is unimportant, because it doesn't make much difference what lottery operators say they use the money for. They might as well say they spend it for beer.

Another one runs twice a month in New Brunswick, N. J., under the auspices of a fraternal group with which, by interesting happenstance, Mr Farley long has been prominently associated. This one pays a capital prize of $2,600 and $650 for second, $250 for third, $150 for fourth and so on down to $10 each for consolation to 150 trailers. The tickets cost a quarter each and are so tacky that they could easily be counterfeited—and, no doubt, are, from time to time—this being the principal headache of lottery workers after they have arranged their local political fix.

Well, there is another, called the Elks Kiddie Sweeps, at Phillipsburg, Pa., with chances priced at a dime or three for a quarter, with weekly drawings and a capital prize of $1,000, a $500 second prize and a total distribution of $3,100. This one warns its clients that it is not affiliated with the crippled kiddies of Reading, Pa., and boasts that it hasn't missed a week since April, 1935.

Maybe, without knowing it, we do have a big lottery trade in our country which if the people only knew where to buy tickets, would absorb the money which has been going to Ireland.

I will let you know more about it from time to time.

Senora Rushes Divorce and Visit To War-Torn Home

Justice Cox yesterday granted the plea of Mrs. Sinforosa Prieto that her divorce case be moved ahead so she can go back to Spain and see what the civil war left of her property in Santander.

She understands that her house was bombed frequently, but she is sure there is something left, because the Franco government sent her a bill for taxes for the last three years.

Mrs. Prieto plans to sell the property if she can and return to running her boarding house at 2500 Ontario road northwest.

Prieto was last heard of when he returned to Spain some years ago, it was said. His wife's divorce action charged voluntary separation of more than five years. David L. Riordan is her attorney.

Life's Darkest Moment

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Human Difficulty In Washington

DURING THIS session of Congress there has been prompt and effective action in one matter of the greatest importance, namely, national defense. On the other two major issues, foreign policy and domestic recovery, there has been delay, division, deadlock and national disunion.

No doubt men can agree more readily on the need to strengthen armaments than they can agree on a definition of what are American vital interests in Asia, in the Pacific, in South America and in Europe. With the Nation as a whole agreeing on the need for more armaments, it is a fairly simple matter to vote the authorizations and to appropriate the funds for the Army and Navy. This is easier than it is to agree on the level of domestic expenditures and their distribution, the character of taxes and their distribution. Nevertheless, the contrast is striking between the unanimity on national defense and the disunity on foreign policy and domestic recovery.

Acquired Habit Of Disagreeing

AS THE disagreement sharpens and the deadlock hardens, the controversies over foreign affairs and domestic recovery take on the appearance of an irreconcilable conflict of principles. Observers who have to comment on these issues find it more and more convenient to make the confusion intelligible by interpreting it as a deadlock among sharply defined theories—between isolationism and intervention, between spending and a balanced budget, between collectivism and private enterprise, and so on and so on.

But this can become a misleading interpretation of the true situation, a subtle misrepresentation of what is actually going on which unintentionally aggravates the confusion and accentuates the disagreement. The truth is, I believe, that in the great divisions in Washington, between the business community and the Administration, between New Dealers and Congress, the conflict is primarily between men, only incidentally between their ideas. They have acquired the habit of disagreeing, of distrusting one another, of trying to beat out one another, and in this human quarrel theories are much less articles of faith than they are weapons in a quarrel.

THUS, FOR example, the controlling fact in the whole field of American foreign policy is that there is no continuing, personal, confidential communication between Congress on the one hand, the President and the State Department on the other. Each moves in a separate sphere, and there is no such thing as effective communication between them.

The actual cause of the whole deadlock is in this separation between the two branches of Government that have to collaborate if there is to be an American foreign policy. Whatever debatable differences really exist have become magnified out of all proportion by the failure of the President to take Congress into his confidence, by the failure of Congress to create an atmosphere in which the President can prudently take it into his confidence. What appears to be a great and solemn alignment on immense issues is the consequence, and not the cause, of the human controversy between Mr. Roosevelt on the one hand, the Congressional leaders on the other.

They distrust each other, and they do not consult. Because they do not consult, they distrust each other more and more. Because as men they have fallen into the habit of quarreling, they are unable as statesmen to make clear and impressive the American position in this dangerous world. They seem to be debating great policies; actually they are conducting a feud in which policy is dragged in, and dragged down, to rationalize and justify their side of the quarrel.

Can't Overcome Resentments

THIS SAME condition is at the bottom of the paralyzing conflict between the Administration and the business community. There is nothing in all the elaborate analyses and theories being propounded and debated before Senator O'Mahoney's committee, or elsewhere among the articulate inhabitants of Washington, in which discerning and patient men could not find a working agreement on the next practical steps to be taken. It is not principle that divides the main body of the New Dealers from Congress or from the main mass of the people. It is personal antagonism. And it is this personal antagonism which causes both sides to accentuate all their differences and to ignore all that they could agree upon.

It is idle to ask whether the one side or the other is temperamentally the more irreconcilable. For every grievance which the anti-New Dealers are nursing, the New Dealers have an atrocity story of their own which they cling to lovingly, as most men do, when they cherish their grievances.

The fact of the matter is, however, that when each side has recounted the reasons why it cannot trust the other, or work with it for the sake of the country, the net of it all is that things are stalled because men are not magnanimous enough, not resolutely enough concerned with the real problem, to overcome their resentments and their vanities.

THERE IS A human delinquency in Washington today in which suspicion and vindictiveness, personal animosity and pride, are being paraded as doctrine and substituted for policy. The moral responsibility for remedying this condition rests on the conscience of one man. That man is the President of the United States.

To say this is not to overlook the fact that he has been and is now confronted by an opposition which recruits some part of its strength from reactionary and selfish interests, which fights him, often unfairly, and at times unscrupulously. The moral responsibility is Mr. Roosevelt's responsibility because he alone has power to re-establish communication among men of good will who have divergent opinions, to re-create an atmosphere of human confidence among the factions.

Men Learn From Their Mistakes

NO ONE but Mr. Roosevelt can insist on consultation in foreign affairs between Congress and the Administration, between the State Department and the proper committees and the responsible leaders. He can insist. He has the information. He cannot get the help of Congress unless he invites it, and he cannot hope to collaborate with Congress if he keeps it suspiciously at arm's length.

And no one but Mr. Roosevelt can decide whether his Cabinet and the heads of the commissions and the majority in Congress shall find a sensible human basis for working out their agreements with business and of defining and limiting their disagreements. Yet it is this human basis of common action in both fields, foreign affairs and recovery, that is most wanting today, and most important for the future.

For no one knows exactly and comprehensively what are the problems that will have to be met. No one knows surely that this measure or that will work out as its advocates hope. That is why underlying all particular policies and measures it is so indispensable to have and to hold on to the habit of human collaboration. For when the habit is strong, men learn from their mistakes, and correct them. But when this habit is lost, the inevitable mistakes divide men more and more irreparably.

New Deal's Problem

By Mark Sullivan

Surveying Moods

FOR A TEXT about the state of the country, there is a phrase in an article by a journalist close to the inner circle of the New Deal, Mr. Ernest Lindley. Mr. Lindley's phrase is "The failure of the generally anticipated spring business recovery to materialize." This failure Mr. Lindley says, and everybody knows, has a meaning for the political year 1940.

The New Dealers have ways of surveying the mood of the country. If they have found that the people feel discouraged, such judgment coincides with information acquired by the writer of this article. I have just spent a short time in one of the most productive farming sections of the United States. The mood of the farmers, and of the people in the nearby villages, is very low. The farmers say, possibly with some exaggeration, that things are worse with them now than during the depth of the depression seven years ago.

One condition in this community is at once an effect and a cause of the mood of discouragement. The farms, ordinarily spick and span as a suburban lawn, are more unkempt than at any time before in half a century. For this particular condition, the farmers blame WPA. In this section WPA pays a wage of 50 cents an hour. That is more than farmers feel they can afford to pay. Hence fences are not kept up, weeds riot uncut along the roadsides, fields are unkempt.

The lack of cheerfulness no doubt is general—the New Dealers would not say so if they did not have good reason to know. The problem on their minds is how to change this mood between now and the Presidential campaign that will begin a year from next month. To this end, Washington expects from day to day some new proposal from the New Deal. There are intimations that the new device may take the form of another spending program, another "pump priming," so timed as to have effect next year.

Not Easy Now To Change Public's Mood

BUT A NEW outpouring of money would hardly have the effect desired, either for the basic purpose of assuring a business recovery, or for the political purpose of changing the people's mood. That pump priming does not really prime has already been proved—at least, it does not prime under the conditions created by the New Deal.

Even a citizen who gives only the slightest thought to public affairs is apt to ask, "If it hasn't worked during six years of it, why should it work now? If spending $20,000,000,000 has not worked, how can we hope that another few billions will work?" A casual citizen may not know, but the thoughtful must know, that neither pump priming nor anything else can bring real recovery, so long as certain New Deal innovations that make recovery impossible, continue to exist.

As for the mood of the people, the New Deal and President Roosevelt suffer from a kind of secondary consequence of their own virtues. The greatest asset Mr. Roosevelt contributed to the country when he took office March 4, 1933, was the tonic of hope and optimism that emanated from his buoyant personality. Not only were the people cheered by the direct promises Mr. Roosevelt made. Aside from the promises, the people built up within themselves expectations greater than the promises held out.

Always, in personal relations, or in relations between the individual and the mass, the promisee generates within himself larger hopes than the promissor intended to hold out. When expectation is not fulfilled, the promissor becomes an innocent victim of one of the most unfortunate of human fates. Not only did the people in 1933 think that the New Deal would set the country on its feet; instinctively they felt that by 1939 the country would be well on the way into a higher level of prosperity than ever before.

Hopes Unfulfilled Hard to Rewarm

IT IS QUITE in keeping with this trait of human nature that the people's mood about Mr. Roosevelt should be not so much blame as disappointment. It is a disappointment touched with kindly charity. But politically the disappointment is likely to be fatal nevertheless. High hopes unfulfilled are not easy to rewarm into life. Hardly anything Mr. Roosevelt or the New Deal can do now would be able to restore the country's former mood.

If this theory is correct, the people next year are likely to turn to someone other than Mr. Roosevelt. The "someone else" might be either one more radical than Mr. Roosevelt, or one more conservative. But the someone more radical is not in sight. Had Huey Long lived, conceivably he might have been the beneficiary of the country's present mood. Possibly history may say that Mr. Roosevelt's greatest contribution was that he piloted the country through a time in which the popular temptation to follow radical leaders was great—but that Mr. Roosevelt sufficiently appeased the popular radical mood to take the ground from under the feet of leaders more radical than himself.

In the lack of a leader more radical than Mr. Roosevelt, the country is apt to turn to one more conservative. This probability seems borne out by the Republican successes in last year's election—and also by a by-product of that election, the practical wiping out of radical third parties, such as Farmer-Labor and the La Follettes National Progressive Party.

Axis Into Alliance

By Barnet Nover

Italy And Germany Pool Forces

WITH RARE unanimity, impartial observers of the Italian scene have reported that the Berlin-Rome axis is not popular with large sections of the Italian people.

This widespread feeling is the product of historic memories, recent grievances and present fears. The Italian people have not forgotten that Italy and Germany were on opposite sides during the World War and that, ever since, Germans have accused them of desertion.

A great many Italians also mistrust Hitler, believing that the Fuehrer twice double-crossed the Duce. In 1934, the Italians recall, Hitler sought to engineer a putsch in Vienna. Last year he destroyed the independence of Austria whose independence he had guaranteed.

The Italians have never been happy over the extension of Germany's frontiers to the Brenner. Nor are they happy over the introduction into Italy of German racial theories, so alien to the Italian spirit. Above all, they fear that the link with Berlin makes their country little more than a tail to the Nazi kite.

WHY IS IT, then, in view of this prevalent state of mind in Italy, that the Rome government instead of loosing the bonds uniting it with Berlin has now seen fit to tighten them? On Monday the axis was transformed into an alliance and one very much stronger than the old triple alliance of which both Germany and Italy were members.

Various factors probably played a part in this development. But a prime, if paradoxical, reason was that the alliance had to be made precisely because the axis was unpopular.

As long as Germany and Italy were not formally committed in support of each other, the popular Italian attitude made for potential friction and possible weakness. It meant that Germany could not be sure that if the test came, Italy would be at her side.

Now, as long as the axis was in a position to intimidate its rivals by a show of force, the absence of formal commitments did not make very much difference. But with Great Britain now engaged in the creation of an antiaggression bloc of potentially formidable dimensions, the uncertainty regarding Italy's policy made it more difficult than ever for Hitler to get what he wants without war.

IN OTHER WORDS, recent developments in Europe have made it peremptory for Germany to make absolutely certain that, should it come to a showdown, Italy would go along with her. And the only way that can be done is to extend the scope of German influence and authority in the Italian Peninsula.

For some months there has been a constant penetration of Italian industry, commerce and finance and even the army and government by German agents, a factor which has added to the unpopularity of the axis in Italy. Under the terms of the alliance, what was done slowly and surreptitiously can now be done openly and on a large scale.

The German-Italian pact, therefore, is further confirmation of the old adage that every alliance consists of a horse and a rider. In this case the rider is obviously Hitler.

BUT WHY has Italy consented to an arrangement which is not only invidious, humiliating and unpopular but also may lead to a marked limitation of her freedom of action?

The answer is that Mussolini had no alternative but to consent to Hitler's imperious demands. To desert the axis at this time would not help but hinder the achievement of his Mediterranean ambitions. If Italy, with German support, has been unable to wrest any important concessions out of France, Italy without German support can certainly not do so. And the Duce had also to reckon with the possibility that the destruction of the axis would almost immediately be followed by a German thrust across the Brenner and the establishment of German authority on the Adriatic.

WITH GERMAN support, however, Italy has at least a chance of achieving her imperial ambitions. That will depend on the extent to which Germany and her ally can succeed in smashing the antiaggression bloc and thus isolating Great Britain and France.

It is possible that Hitler will not succeed in doing so. But there is a real possibility that he will. And if he does, there will be practical reasons for the Fuehrer to assist Italy in smashing the British naval hegemony in the Mediterranean which, in turn, would open the way to Italian expansion in North Africa.

FOR ITALY the alliance with Germany is a long-shot bet. But there appears no easier way for Mussolini to make good the investment of Italian blood and treasure he has made in Ethiopia and Spain. When he embarked on his East African campaign, intervened in Spain, and allowed Hitler to swallow up Austria, he gave hostages to fortune. He can redeem them only by doing Hitler's bidding, however unpopular that action may be among the people he rules.

G. W. U. Medical Society Elects

The George Washington Medical Society announced yesterday election of Dr. Arnold McNitt as president for the coming year. Dr. William B. King was elected vice president, Dr. Leslie French re-elected secretary and Dr. Burton Glenn treasurer.

The society was informed its nominee for dean of the Medical School had not been accepted, apparently because the candidate was under the stipulated age limit.

D.C. Bank Receiver Loses in HighCourt

Cary A. Hardee, receiver of the Commercial National Bank of Washington, failed yesterday to obtain a supreme court review of a decision denying him recovery of $162,298 from the government.

The money involved was deposited by an alien property custodian many years ago. The bank pledged securities to protect the deposit. When the bank became insolvent in 1933 the pledged securities were sold by the government.

Imaginary Dialogues: The King And Queen

Queen—How do you feel, George?

King—Terrible. But I guess we've just got to go through with it. Do you feel equal to it?

Queen—No; but duty is duty.

King—I suppose we ought to feel very gay and happy about it; everybody is doing so much to honor us.

Queen—I don't want to appear ungrateful, but wouldn't it be great if we could get away off some place where nobody would try to honor us for a long time?

King—Oh, boy.

Queen—We were so happy and contented back there in Buckingham where, comparatively speaking, nobody was paying any attention to us!

King—Into each life some goodwill tours must fall.

Queen—But we should have been given time to train for it. The strain is terrific.

King—I've always contended that kings and queens should have doubles. I mean somebody to double for them, just as they do in the movies. When a picture calls for some tough experience, the extra always does it.

Queen—When we return I hope you will speak to Parliament about it.

King—All this popping of flashlights gets to be a fearful ordeal. And I suppose this is mild to what it will be in America.

Queen—America is a wonderful place, I hear.

King—Yes; what's left of it is quite interesting, they tell me. It was terribly devastated by the World War, you know.

Queen—I see they are planning a terrific reception for us at Washington.

King—Yes; and it ought to be quite nice up to a point.

Queen—Up to what point?

King—Up to the point where President and Mrs. Roosevelt insist on having us eat American hot-dogs.

Queen—Do they always do that?

King—From what I've read I suspect so.

Queen—What is all that fuss about canned corned beef? We're not going to have to eat that, are we?

King—It looks very much like a build-up for the stuff.

Queen—Well, I hear more bands outside. I guess we are in for another day of it. I don't even get time to have my hair done.

King and Queen (as they start forth)—The things we do for England!

All these World's Fairs may or may not prove a great boon to business, but there can't be much doubt that they will help the foot doctors and arch supporter manufacturers.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Washington Women's Habit of Pursuing Men, Most Embarrassing to Virginian

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: In Virginia, where I was reared, I was taught by my elders, and observed it to be the invariable rule practiced by others, that it was proper only for the gentleman to entreat the pleasure of a young lady's company for an evening, whether to attend a circus, the theater, a dance, to go driving, etc.; and, conversely, that it was quite unheard-of for the lady to solicit the man. Yet it appears that here in Washington this particular folkway does not prevail. The practice of women extending invitations to men seems to be the order of the day.

In consequence, this writer has been quite embarrassed on many occasions, by unintentionally hurting a lady's feelings. If, for example, a lady suggests that you take her to the circus, and some previous engagement obliges you to decline, she becomes quite hurt at your refusal, and her sense of injury is not appeased even after lengthy explanations and apologies. Embarrassment becomes acute for both.

It seems to me that it would be far better for both sexes if the proprieties governing the issuance of invitations were clearly defined and closely adhered to. Thus, if it is the gentleman's privilege and responsibility to request the lady's company, he will do so when convenient. But if the lady shares this prerogative, then she should be prepared to face, with good grace, the possibility that her invitations may not always prove acceptable. What do you think? Am I provincial, or behind the times?

MAN.

Penalty of Aggression

DEAR MAN: Anyone who gets around, even in the most desultory fashion, in contemporary metropolitan society, must recognize the fact—whether or not he approves of it—that an increasing number of enterprising, unattached American women no longer stand on coy Victorian ceremony in the matter of acquiring after-dark masculine companionship. It is no longer "unheard-of"—and hasn't been unusual for 20 years or more—for the American woman to take the initiative in pairing herself off, for an evening's social sortie, with some male acquaintance who has caught her fancy.

It is my guess that the custom "caught on," or had its beginnings, about the time of the so-called World War, since when it has evolved into its current epidemic proportions, which sees uncounted regiments of blithely self-assured, grimly determined or unhappily desolate ladies openly stalking their prey, with no apologies to anyone. To borrow the words of an old song: "Everybody's doing it." That is to say, women of all ages and in every walk of life: high school girls, college coeds, and busine.s women; grass widows subsisting on alimony; sod widows on the incomes from insurance investments; ladies whose husbands trustfully leave them to their own devices while concentrating on the business of bringing home the bacon; even some of the more delicately nurtured, yet unclaimed, blossoms of social register rating.

For the modern unattached, socially at-loose-ends lady to meet a man whom she thinks she would like to know better is, in 75 cases out of 100, for her to busy herself immediately with plans for "seeing more of him." So what does she do? It depends upon her social training, background and equipment. Those in fortunate circumstances immediately add the man's name to their "little dinner" and cocktail party lists, and induce their more intimate and trustworthy friends to aid and abet them in crossing his path.

They ask his advice; put him in the position of rendering them odd and sundry small favors; repay these (alleged) favors with casual-seeming invitations of one sort or another, to share an evening's entertainment—the theater, a lecture, an art show, a benefit performance or such-like event—and gradually promote a reciprocal relationship of relaxed and cordial friendship, which may lead to anything or nothing, but which is based on the tacit mutual understanding that each is free to call upon the other as "a friend in need" at any time.

The woman of lesser advantages and more limited acquaintanceship, who must rely upon such unpredictable events as the arrival in town of the circus, let us say, before she has sufficient overt warrant to cast her nets for masculine companionship, is in a devilishly awkward predicament to begin with. She is 90 per cent licked before she starts; and knows it. Hence her anguished embarrassment, which knows no assuagement, when her tentative invitation is declined. Still, as you point out, with a bitter logic which none can deny—any woman who takes it upon herself to issue such invitations, and particularly when she issues them more or less aimlessly and without assiduously established premise, must (or, at least, should) be prepared to accept reversal with good grace.

One is forced to assume that a woman who would react with bitterly wounded pride when a man is obliged, but courteously, to decline her invitation to this or that affair—one is forced to assume that she has never been called upon to decline other men's comparable invitations. The girl who, customarily or even intermittently, receives more invitations than she may conveniently accept, finds herself reacting with appreciation amounting to affection, to the man who maintains a sweet disposition and a cheerful determination to "try again," i. the hope of "better luck next time," when she cannot accept his invitations of current date.

Such a woman would, as a matter of course, behave in reversal as she preferred men to behave: with poise, understanding, sincere regret and yet with hardy optimism concerning another, future time. She would never hold any man guilty of committing the unforgivable sin if, when declining her invitation, he volunteered plausible explanations why he was forced to forego that pleasure. So, to sum up: I agree with you that the woman who usurps the male's immemorial prerogative of social aggression acquires a concomitant obligation to keep her chin up when "turned down;" but I do believe you are a bit "provincial," or "behind the times" in failing to digest the fact that "proprieties governing the issuance of invitations" have changed since the days when you were a boy in Old Virginia.

Beginning with the hats—for, as the poet has said 'a hat can make or break a woman'—I feel we should at once prohibit on public streets the following:

"All midget pill boxes tilted extravagantly over one eye.

"All hooligan hats on women of broad, dish-faced countenances.

"All exaggerated trylon and perisphere hats—especially on horse-faced wearers.

"All poke bonnets, streamers and chin straps on women over 35 years old.

"All large table centerpieces of fruit or flowers masquerading as headgear.

"All Oriental and gypsy turbans on women who are not Oriental other than in avoirdupois.

"All cartwheels and Maud Muller effects worn on crowded street cars and buses.

Dunce Caps Not for Dunces

"I shall also seek legislation requiring an intelligence test of any woman before she is permitted to wear a hat with a dunce cap crown. This type of hat on most women has too obvious an implication. Then I shall do something about snoods and wimples, and I shall seek to establish an age limit on the wearing of hats with the 'baby tilt'."

"What else will you reform besides hats, Mrs. DeGoofey?" asked a woman reporter, wearing an inverted paper doily.

"Well there is a whole season's campaign in women's summer clothes generally. For some mysterious reason, members of my sex become less rational in attire under the influence of humidity. Take the wearing of stripes, for instance. There are entirely too many human zebras at large. I also feel there is a definite danger of some of the—er—well more militant members of my sex being picked up by Lorton officials. Not one woman in 100 can wear stripes successfully and those attempting such feats should be required first to obtain permits from a District art committee that will pass on their ensembles.

"The 'darling little knit dress', especially when worn by a woman without a girdle, is something I also hope to suppress. And then I will undoubtedly do something about the 'Falling I-Q Trend' otherwise known as the Little Girl Influence. I am completely tired of seeing adults going around attired as if they're going to a children's costume party.

"Also I shall organize a Carrie Nation Brigade to snatch ribbon hairbows off women at evening events and a Jack the Snipper corps to work on George Washington peruke hair bows."

Skirts for Human Hippopotami

"What about the women in pants movement?" asked an elderly editorial writer.

"I'm glad you have brought that up," said Mrs. DeGoofey. "I have been campaigning all my life against human hippopotami of the female variety in pants, and I expect to make this one of the major planks in the platform of the Do Something About It League. 'No woman over size 14 in pants' is the league's slogan and that applies to slacks, overalls, shorts, hostess pajamas, harem trousers—every type of bifurcated garment, with the possible exception of bathing suits. However, beach wear is a campaign in itself and I shall announce plans for it later."

"Mrs. DeGoofey, I dislike to be personal," ventured a British publicity representative, "but I observe that you yourself are wearing a new summer hat. Don't you consider it—well a little radical?"

"Certainly!" was the reply. "You should know by now, young man, that reformers only reform in others their own vices."

Today's Health Talk

Cancer Queries

What is cancer? Cancer is a disorderly growth of cells of the patient's own tissues. This growth does not respond to the laws that control activities of normal cells, it never ceases during the life of the individual.

What causes cancer? There are many causes of cancer. The most common is some form of chronic or prolonged irritation. This irritation may be of several kinds—as chemical, thermal (heat) or mechanical, as friction. More than 45 chemicals are capable of producing cancer when introduced into laboratory animals. Constant friction of a mole or wart or of an old burn scar may produce cancer.

Is cancer a germ? There is no scientific evidence that cancer is caused by a germ.

Is cancer contagious or infectious? As a cancer is not due to a germ, it is neither contagious nor infectious.

Does the use of aluminum cooking vessels cause cancer? No.

Does electrical refrigeration cause cancer? No.

What is the relation of food to cancer? So far as known, no food or combination of foods has any influence on the cause of cancer.

Is there any disgrace in having cancer? No. There is no more disgrace in having cancer than in having a broken arm.

How does cancer spread through the body? In three ways. (1) Cancer cells grow through the walls of blood vessels and are carried by the blood stream to distant parts of the body. (2) They enter the lymphatic stream in a similar manner and are carried to nearby lymph glands. (3) The cancer cells grow directly from one tissue into another.

Improve Your Tennis Stroke

LIFE'S FUN for Laura since she taught herself to play a good game of tennis. More dates, more invitations to the country club!

Everyone likes a girl who can join in the fun, who isn't a "dud" at sports — and you can easily play good tennis when you know the simple principles, apply them in practice.

It's accuracy and not strength that counts—and accuracy is mainly a matter of keeping your eye on the ball. Look at our diagram to see how you get such "eye control" in practicing a service stroke.

You begin with a hammer and nail. Raise nail about a foot over your head and, watching the nail so you won't hit your fingers, give it a smart blow with the hammer. Then take racket and ball and repeat the process.

Now you're ready to serve. Swing racket back over right shoulder, toss the ball in the air—watch it!—and hit it at about the spot where you held the nail.

By such simple methods you learn the different strokes. And to get good control of the ball in play, to perfect your volleying, try the "Little Game," using only two service courts as your field.

Send 15c in coins for our booklet, "How to Improve Your Tennis," to The Washington Post Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

Summer Colony—Second Floor

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

New York, Plus Fair, May Be Panhandlers' Paradise, Mayor Fears

New York, May 22.

AMONG THE MANY things for which our village is famous, or vice versa, is the begging or panhandling business, which is said to be very highly organized, and to bring in some $15,000,000 a year to its practitioners. What with the fair and all, the city fears a great growth in the number of moochers on our public highways, and Hizzoner LaGuardia has started a stern drive to wipe the racket from the streets.

ALICE HUGHES

Ladies as well as gentlemen pursue this ancient profession. Some lend a strictly commercial air to their enterprise by offering a few pencils, or some chewing gum, but many just dart out of doorways, sidle alongside the preoccupied pedestrian and mumble the old tale about a bite to eat. The mayor points out that the city provides all kinds of care for the jobless or disabled, and also that some professionals refuse this proffered aid unless it equals their take as beggars. He tells of one blind man who refused to stop his begging on the streets unless the city guaranteed him the $125 a month he says he draws from generous citizens.

P. S.—The city did nothing of the sort. The more famous of these people have their regular beats. A famous Broadway character is a legless man who propels himself on a low-slung cart, accompanied by an amiable little dog. This fellow does very well indeed for himself, being a tragic and sentimental spectacle.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Hope blossoms in the hearts of some of us. Perhaps you read that Boston's society kiddies are fed up with all this jabber about Gotham's "glamour girls" (well, who the heck isn't?) and has chosen one of its favorite daughters, Eleanor Frothingham, aged 17, to take the glam title. More power to you, kid! Her nickname is "Sister," which is in the tradition. That glamour stuff is deader'n a sardine everywhere, and we hack-pensters would give plenty for a word or phrase to replace it. So far, no dice. A movie company tried to slip over "oomph," which is just silly, and sounds like a burp. Any suggestions, sisters?

Your Figure, Madame!

Right Shoes for World's Fair Most Important; Lightweight Kid With Rubber Heels Suggested; Stockings Should Be Fresh and Plenty Long

THE FAIR WILL be easy on visitors' feet, so they tell us. But don't you believe it to the extent that you try to do your sightseeing in high-heeled shoes. It's quite true that there are plenty of buses, electric and hand-pushed chairs, and thousands of benches—but if you expect to see things, you'll walk, and walk and walk.

As far as we can see, the problem of what to wear to the fair narrows right down to shoes. According to the experts, the best type is lightweight kid, with a low heel, broad base and tread, and either Oxford or straps so they will stay on of their own accord and your feet won't have to do any gripping.

Patent leather makes your feet burn and suede holds the perspiration and keeps getting heavier and heavier. And although the fair authorities have had the forethought to put down resilient pavements, it would be a good plan to have rubber heels, but not rubber soles. And don't wear run-over heels!

Short Stockings Hurt

Short stockings, as you may know, can make your feet hurt as quickly as too short shoes. Your stockings should be a good half inch longer than the foot. Always begin your long jaunts with a fresh pair.

If your feet complain at the least exertion see your chiropodist and also toughen them up with exercises like the following:

Stand facing a wall with hands on the wall for support, feet very pigeon-teod. Slowly rise on the toes, then just as slowly lower the heels to the floor and bend the knees, holding the feet in the same extremely pigeon-toed position in which you started the exercise. In rising and lowering, the weight is thrown to the outer borders of the feet, strenghtening the arches. The exercise should, of course, be performed in the bare feet. Do not repeat more than five times.

An exercise the children will love to do with you is to try to write with a pencil gripped between the first and second toes. Never mind about the penmanship; if you can write at all, it's good exercise. Then try wriggling the toes separately, and pick up marbles, jacks or pebbles with them.

Contrast Baths Help

Does all that sound silly to you? Well . . . smart girls like Sonja Henie do foot exercises!

Finish up with contrast baths, placing the feet first in hot, then in cold water, and scrub them with a good, fairly stiff brush to wake up the circulation. This is not only a toughening measure, but also excellent first-aid treatment.

With a little preliminary toughening-up and a good pair of shoes, your feet should be equal to the miles of walking through the New York shops as well as the fair grounds.

Sweetbreads for Luncheon

By Martha Ellyn,
The Post Food Editor.

SWEETBREADS are one of the most delicate of meat dishes. They may be broiled, braised and served en casserole, pan-broiled, baked, creamed and cooked other interesting ways. Sweetbreads and mushrooms are a bit exotic when you want a distinguished dish. Green peas and mushrooms are the traditional vegetables to serve with sweetbreads. A bed of strained celery is a good background for broiled sweetbreads. Creamed sweetbreads are especially good for a macaroni mold. Sweetbreads may be served in sauces other than white sauce, tomato for example, but any but a delicate sauce will conceal rather than bring out the delicate flavor of the meat. Wine sauces are often used.

Douglases, Hard to Find, Charming, Once Located

Informal 'At Home' One of Few Where Guests Can Draw Up Chair and Chat; Justice and His Sister 'Sit In' at Tea

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor

"GETTING THE NUMBER" of Justice and Mrs. William O. Douglas seems to be quite a trick. As everybody knows, their telephone became "private' the day he was appointed to the Supreme Court; and if their house has a number, it must be private, too.

Truth is, employes at that gasoline station nearby could make a lot of money charging a fee for giving directions. "Right down Eastern avenue, first turn to the right," was the answer to a couple of dozen inquirers yesterday afternoon when Mrs. Douglas was receiving at her usual Monday afternoon "at home."

As is the case with most weekly receptions of the Supreme Court hostesses, Mrs. Douglas' yesterday was both informal and delightful. In other words, it was the kind of get-together at which you could both find a chair and draw it up to the tea table. An added attraction was Justice Douglas himself, who came in toward the latter half of the party and drew up a chair, too.

MISS MARTHA DOUGLAS, sister of the Justice, who arrived in Washington Sunday from Chicago, and was off to New York last night, was also on hand, giving a sizable circle of Washingtonians a chance to know her. She should be here more often. I don't know when I've met anyone with a more pleasing personality. She's pretty, too; red hair, creamy complexion and blue eyes.

Pouring tea was Mrs. Wesley A. Sturgis, who was trimly turned out in a navy chiffon dress, set off with a matching wide-brimmed hat. She and her husband recently moved to Washington from New Haven, Conn., where he was a member of the law school faculty and at one time a teaching colleague of Justice Douglas. Mrs. Douglas, who met her guests at the door, wore a little-girl linen frock, fashioned with a chartreuse blouse, a pencil blue plaited skirt, belted in cerise—very becoming.

White linen, made on simple lines and trimmed in eyelet embroidery was the frock chosen by Miss Douglas. Mrs. Miriam B. Berryhill was there with her nephew, Willis Ballinger, who lingered on to chat with Justice Douglas. Miss Elia O'Day dropped in for a cup of tea and a brief chat. Mrs. Mordecai Ezekiel was there, and a dozen or so others.

THE FORTHCOMING royal visit still makes up most tea table talk around these parts, and while Mrs. Douglas herself yesterday seemed disposed to discuss other subjects, most of her guests mentioned Their Majesties a number of times as sandwiches and cakes went the rounds. Somebody expressed sympathy with the King and Queen for having "to walk through such a heavy schedule day in and day out," which reminded me of what Mrs. Roosevelt said earlier in the day at her press conference.

While her own daily round would make the average woman drop in her tracks, Mrs. Roosevelt was more than a little concerned about Their Majesties' American calendar.

How they are going to stand it is a mystery to her. Many other details of their Washington stay seem also to be a mystery. "I don't know," was her reply to a number of questions put to her at the conference.

MEANWHILE, Mrs. Roosevelt's own calendar continues to be crowded. Following her conference yesterday, she heard the Dayton (Ohio) Children's Chorus at 2 o'clock, and later attended the annual spring fete of the Woman's National Democratic Club at the Carlton Hotel.

Last night, the indefatigable First Lady went to New York, where this afternoon she will participate in the Rural Woman's Day broadcast. Somebody at yesterday's conference asked her if she was to continue being "a permanent attraction at New York World's Fair all season," and she laughingly replied thus far she had received little attention there.

MRS. ROOSEVELT will return to the White House tomorrow morning and in the afternoon will be hostess at a garden party in honor of women Government executives (Washington's "petticoat government," as this group has been called). Thursday she will go to Arthurdale, W. Va., to attend commencement exercises on Friday, and will return to Washington Saturday. Her next press conference will take place Monday at 11 a. m. and that afternoon she will receive a group representing the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

SOCIETY-GO-ROUND: Justice McReynolds entertained at an informal dinner last evening in his apartment at Hotel 2400 . . . The retiring Secretary of the Finnish Legation and Mme. Von Numers will be guests of honor at a dinner this evening, given by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Larson . . . On Sunday, they were feted at a cocktail party at which Mr. and Mrs. William Prescott entertained . . . and on Thursday they will be honored at a cocktail party given by Mrs. Emil Hurja . . . They will leave for New York on May 30, sailing the following day on the Gripsholm, that will take them straight to Helsinki, Finland . . . Mme. Guimaraes, wife of the First Secretary of the Brazilian Embassy, will entertain at luncheon on Friday.

Mrs. Close Honor Guest at Luncheon

Guests included Princess Cantacuzene, Mrs. Thomas Riggs, Mrs. David F. Sellers, Mrs. H. H. Hough, Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman, Mrs. James Helm; Mrs. Richard S. Andrews, wife of Lieut. Andrews, U. S. N., and daughter of Mrs. Russell; Mrs. Charles Wilson, Mrs. William F. Sowers, Mrs. Frederick De Courvy Faust, Mrs. Frank Baldwin, Mrs. David Knowlton, Miss Mary McQuade and Mrs. Frederick Solger.

Society Turns Out for Glover Garden Party to Aid Chest

By Elizabeth Henney.

Society in summer frocks turned out yesterday afternoon at the spring garden party given on Mrs. Charles Carroll Glover, jr.'s lovely estate in Massachusetts avenue, and the sky's brooding frown cleared into a sunny smile.

The affair was a combination garden party and outdoor exhibit of the work of the 20 Community Chest agencies for the last year. The long sweep of green lawn was gay with striped marquees, under which were exhibits of handiwork of all kinds as well as refreshments. In the pit of the natural amphitheater of the grounds against a backdrop of low green trees and shrubs, more than 200 children gave a program to gay dances, songs and athletic events.

Mrs. Stanley F. Reed, the chairman of the Community League, welcomed and directed the guests who were invited to view the exhibits. Mrs. Dwight W. Davis, under whose expert leadership this first event of the year's activities was launched, pressed into service a committee of thirteen hostesses.

They included Mrs. Raymond Clapper, Miss Helen Davis, Mrs. William O. Douglas, Mrs. Ernest C. Draper, Mrs. William J. Flather, jr., Mrs. Laurence H. Green, Mrs. Alanson B. Houghton, Mrs. Reginald S. Huidekoper, Mrs. Emory S. Land, Mrs. Keith Merrill, Mrs. Chauncey G. Parker, jr., Mrs. Andrew Saul and Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone.

Serving on the motor corps committee, which furnished the transportation and chauffeurs for bringing the children, were Mrs. David Barry, Mrs. Randolph Bishop, Mrs. Montgomery Blair, jr., Mrs. Walter Chappell, Mrs. Fenton Fadeley, Mrs. David E. Finley, Mrs. George Hamilton, jr., Mrs. B. Lowndes Jackson, jr., Mrs. Harold Krogh, Mrs. Harrison Prindel, Mrs. Frederick Richards, Mrs. Eugene Roberts, Mrs. Andrew Saul, Mrs. William Snow, Mrs. Mark Sullivan, jr., Mrs. Corcoran Thom, jr., Mrs. Frank Thorpe, Mrs. Harold Tittman, Mrs. Robert Walsh and Mrs. Arnold Willcox.

Noted here and there on the spacious grounds were Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hurja, the latter in a gay summer print with a bright red flower on her picture hat; Mrs. Theodore Wilkinson, who also chose a picture print gown. Accompanying her was her daughter, Miss Ann Wilkinson, who looked delightfully cool in a dusty pink and white silk print, with white accessories.

Representative and Mrs. Phil Ferguson were noted strolling by the marquees as were Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Mr. and Mrs. George Maurice Morris, Gen. and Mrs. Frank T. Hines, Mrs. James Taylor, Miss M. B. Merrill, Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Folger, Joshua Evans, Mrs. James Clement Dunn, Miss Mabel Boardman, Mrs. Edward R. Finkenstaedt, Mrs. Ben McKelway, Mrs. James Mitchell, Coleman Jennings, Mrs. Bancroft Davis, Mr. and Mrs. David Willett and many others.

Mrs. J. B. Bayne Cruise Hostess

An occasional shower or two did not dampen the merrymaking yesterday when Mrs. J. Breckinridge Bayne entertained with a cruise in her yacht, Venture II, in honor of Miss Emlen Davies and her fiance, Robert Grosjean, whose marriage takes place Saturday afternoon.

The group, numbering 20, set off in the morning and cruised down the Potomac, picnicking on board. Mrs. Emlen Knight Davies, mother of the bride-to-be, was a passenger, as was her aunt, Mrs. Knight Cochran. Also present were the Misses Margaret Ludeke, of Minneapolis, Barbara Goodwin, Stellita Stapleton, "Bambie" McKenna and Mrs. Elbridge Durbrow, who will be bridesmaids; Mr. and Mrs. Harold DeVeau and Mr. and Mrs. Donald DeVeau, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Marshall, William Blum and Nathan Bartlett.

Miss Lamb to Wed Donald McLean, Jr.

Mrs. Henry M. Lamb, of Stanstead, Province of Quebec, Canada, has announced the engagement of her daughter, Miss Martha Lamb, to Donald H. McLean, jr., son of Representative and Mrs. Donald H. McLean, of Elizabeth, N. J.

The wedding will take place September 2 in Stanstead.

Notes of Society

Official and Residential

The Argentine Ambassador, Felipe Espil, will give a dinner May 31, in honor of Gen. Jose Felix Estigarribia, Minister of Paraguay and President-elect of that country.

Rear Admiral and Mrs. Stanford C. Hooper will entertain this evening at a farewell dinner in honor of Admiral and Mrs. James O. Richardson, who will leave soon for a new station on the West Coast.

The newly appointed Second Secretary of the Brazilian Embassy, Hugo Gondrin, and Senora de Gondrin will arrive here the end of the week or early next week.

Julius Wadsworth, United States Consul to the Free City of Danzig, and Mrs. Wadsworth will arrive in New York tomorrow from Bermuda, and will be at the Madison.

The Baroness von Below has canceled all of her social engagements, due to a death in the family.

Capt. and Mrs. Stanley F. Steele are visiting Mrs. Steele's father, W. K. Reeve, of Georgetown, for several weeks before going to their new post in Panama. They have been in Fort Benning for the past two years. Mrs. Steele is the former Miss Catharine Reeve.

Press Women To Hear Author

Laura Krey, author of the best seller, "And Tell of Time," who recently returned to her home in St. Paul, Minn., after a brief stay in Washington will be back here again next week and will be guest of honor at a luncheon meeting of the Women's National Press Club on Tuesday, May 30, at the Willard Hotel.

The club's luncheon meeting which was to take place today has been canceled because of the current crowded schedule of members of the club.

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon

Englishwoman Writes Book to Explain Baffling Etiquette Surrounding King, Queen

THE AMERICAN reporter who told the King he could certainly "take it," was, to use another homely expression once addressed by one of our countrymen to the former Queen of Spain, "saying a mouthful." Of all the strenuous duties by which the King and Queen earn their pay, none must be more tiresome than the thicket of etiquette with which they are constantly surrounded.

A revealing sidelight on the baffling maze of procedure necessary to correct behavior in the presence of royalty is given in a book, "Etiquette," by an Englishwoman, Mrs. Massey Lyon. Though written after the war, and hailed by the London critics with joy as bringing everything up to date, to an American there is something rather quaint about this volume.

TAKE THIS: "Etiquette demands that when the King and Queen honor a dinner party, the finger bowls should be placed only before them at desert, and not before any of the guests. This is an interesting reminder of the past, for it dates from Jacobite troubles, and was decreed to prevent anyone holding his glass over the bowl when the King's health was drunk, and so salving his conscience by thus toasting "the King over the water." Long buried in oblivion as to its origin, the custom survives in etiquette until today."

Going into minute detail, the writer explains that Their Majesties are addressed as "Sir," or "Ma'am," as the case may be, but warns that the "Ma'am" should be pronounced with a hint of "ah" in it, reminscent very vaguely of the "Marm" of older days, and anyway, it should not degenerate into a bleat. Needless to say, it is always for the royal personage to speak first, and all that falls to the person addressed in normal cases is to reply intelligently, giving the information or making the remarks which the occasion calls for. If the conversation is more than of the shortest kind, the words "Your Majesty" or "Your Royal Highness" should be introduced. For example, a Princess visiting a children's home might say to you, "How charming the rooms and the little ones are looking today," and you would reply, "Thank you, ma'am; they just loved the toys Your Royal Highness graciously sent at Christmas. It is not "you sent," but "Your Royal Highness."

THE CURTSY controversy continues to be the one silly element which Americans insist on injecting into the royal tour. The State Department having said that guests may do as they please about that, the matter should be closed, but for those who are going to ape British etiquette in such matters, it might be well to heed Mrs. Lyons' words of wisdom.

"Just as the personal address is the same for all royalty, so is the proper action when immediate personal notice is accorded. The curtsy is not so deep as the regulation court curtsy made on presentation, but it is quite a distinct "bob," and should be made with the body erect. I suppose, roughly speaking, the left knee goes down about half way between the calf and the ankle of the right leg, or a little below . . . Members of our royal house invariably shake hands with those who are presented to them . . . At the end of the little conversation which is often held, a second curtsy or bow is made, and one takes three or four steps backward while, probably, someone else takes one's place."

In the good old days, B. K. (Before Kennedy), when great batches of Americans were presented at Buckingham Palace, regular curtsy-practice sessions were held at the United States Embassy. With the Ambassadress playing the Queen and a secretary acting the role of the King, the Americans were expected to scrape away for hours until they had it perfectly.

MRS. LAWRENCE COOLIDGE, of Boston, has arrived to visit Mr. and Mrs. Roberts Woods Bliss at Dumbarton Oaks, which was the scene of her marriage to Mr. Coolidge several years ago. Tall, slender, with golden hair worn in a long bob, Mrs. Coolidge looked particularly charming at dinner the other evening in a rose colored silk dress with a printed design of dark blue and black. She will be here until the first of the month. Mr. Coolidge, a former Harvard dean, has returned to Boston after spending the weekend here.

A NUMBER of persons already have summer plans up their sleeves . . . Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Rumbold, of the British Embassy, will sail in June for England, where the latter will spend the hot months. Mr. Rumbold will return after a six weeks' vacation. That is one household where complete harmony should reign, if names have anything to do with it, as Mrs. Rumbold was christened Felicity, and her little baby girl is called Serena . . . Baroness Baevens, of the French Embassy, will take her children to California, her home State, for a vacation at her family's residence in Burlingame . . . The Charles Lucets, of the embassy, also are California bound, and will leave July 20 by motor. They look forward eagerly to staying in tourist camps on the way.

Nobles Give Supper Party

Thomas Corcoran and Benjamin Cohen, the two brain trusters who work so hard that their appearance at parties is rare, both showed up for the pleasant buffet supper given on Sunday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Noble. Mr. Noble is slated to be Undersecretary of Commerce, and is now serving as executive assistant to Harry Hopkins.

The party at which 50 were present was held in the garden of Mr. and Mrs. Noble's home at 2404 Kalorama road, which they lease from Dwight Davis. Among those present were Senator and Mrs. Robert La Follette, the former Secretary of War and Mrs. Patrick Hurley, the retiring Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Richard Patterson, the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. George Messersmith; Walter White, of the Advisory Council of the Department of Commerce, and Mrs. White; Mr. and Mrs. Robert McConnell, of Middleburg; Mr. and Mrs. William Flather, jr., Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Houghteling, the Assistant Attorney General and Mrs. Thurman Arnold, Mrs. Gilbert Hitchcock and Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Smith.

Also Robert H. Hinckley, of the Civil Aeronautics Commission, Mrs. Hinckley and several others from the commission, of which Mr. Noble was formerly chairman; Dr. and Mrs. John Oliver LaGorce.

800 at Democratic Fete for First Lady

Cabinet Ladies Assist Mrs. Roosevelt in Receiving Line; Guests' Gowns Compete With Club's Fashion Show for Attention

By Jesse Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

The annual spring fete of the Woman's National Democratic Club for Mrs. Roosevelt, its honorary president, drew more than 800 guests yesterday afternoon. The rain which fell just before the party began did not cause a ripple of concern among the committee members—this time it was indoors at the Carlton Hotel.

Last year, breaking a record of many seasons of bright skies for the club's spring fete, there was rain. The hundreds of guests were packed into the clubhouse and everyone was disappointed. This year it was scheduled to be held inside from the first and not an anxious eye was turned skyward.

Receiving with Mrs. Roosevelt in the Carlton room were Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State; Mrs. Harry Woodring, wife of the Secretary of War; Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, whose daughter, Jean, was one of the attractive models in the fashion show. Mrs. Curtis Shears, committee chairman, made the introductions and Mrs. Claude Pepper, wife of Senator Pepper, and vice president of the club, stood on the other side of Mrs. Roosevelt.

Smart Costumes In Receiving Line

Smart fashions were not all displayed in the style show. They began with the receiving line. The First Lady wore a dusty rose print with a small square figure in it. It was made with a short jacket of the same material over the tailored dress, trimmed with a crisp white bow at the neck and round crystal buttons down the front of the blouse. Her round black hat, with an upturned brim, had a row of soft pink poppies close to the hair in back.

Mrs. Shears' dress was of fuschia shade figured in white and she wore a small hat and veil of the same shade. Mrs. Pepper was in a French blue redingote suit with white polka dots and a small hat of white flowers. Mrs. Hull wore a tailored dress of black, with a white collar and a broad-brimmed white hat with a black crown, trimmed with a small black bow in front and a black veil. Mrs. Woodring's frock was a plum-colored print on a pale pink ground with which she wore a brighter pink belt and, over it, a plum-colored redingote. Her small hat of the same shade had broad ribbon ends in back which fell over her fair hair. Mrs. Swanson wore a navy blue print, figured in pink African daisies, and a navy hat with a trimming of violets on the crown. Mrs. Wallace wore a print dress with white daisies on a light blue ground and a redingote and sailor hat of navy blue.

From the Carlton room, the guests went to the ballroom adjoining, where a high promenade was arranged through the center for the political fashion show. Mrs. Roosevelt and Mrs. Hull stood in the midst of the spectators, until word was passed along that her car was waiting.

The costumes, designated as "Petticoat Politics," "Party Intrigue," "Cotton Lobby" and by other political titles, were modeled by Mrs. W. Frederick Weigester, chairman; Mrs. Francis Cabell Brown, the club president; Miss Doris Bruyninck, Miss Beverly Easley, Miss Peggy Essary, Miss Eleanor Flood, Miss Katharine Friant, Miss Gloria Gudger, Mrs. Mary Senate Howes, Miss Mary Selden Kennedy, Mrs. Franklin Kidd, Miss Austine McDonnell, Miss Anne Moorhead, Miss Dorothy Porter, Mrs. Pepper, Mrs. William Jennings Price, Mrs. Charles Edward Riggs, Miss Lisette Riggs, Miss Louise Katharine Riggs, Mrs. Richard Fred Roper, Miss Peggy Townsend, Miss Jean Wallace and Mrs. Pilson Warren.

In the Shar-Zard room, a floor show was presented with Mrs. Huston Thompson as chairman. There early, in "ringside" seats, were Mr. Thompson, William T. Kelly, chief counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, and William Ayers, of the commission, among the few men at the fete. Mr. Shears, husband of the general chairman, was assisting the ushers in directing the guests, and their young son Leslie Bruce Shears, of "teenish" years or so, was also assisting and ready to answer any and all questions about party arrangements.

Col. O. W. McNeese was master of ceremonies for the floor show. It included a marionette performance, directed by Mrs. H. L. Rust, jr., with Leroy Gerlach, James Busher and Miss de'Graffenried Woolley assisting; Spanish songs by girls from Gunston Hall, a piano solo by Myrna Macklin, and a Latin dance by the Boyd Triplets.

Mrs. Hull Heads Tea Hostesses

Tea was served later. Alternating at the tea table were Mrs. Hull, Mrs. S. Otis Bland, Mrs. Mary E. Buford, Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark, Mrs. Walter F. George, Mrs. Gilbert Hitchcock, Mrs. Jesse Jones, Mrs. Key Pittman and Mrs. Burton K. Wheeler.

Among the guests were Mrs. Emily Newell Blair, honorary vice president and chairman of the founders' committee; Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross, director of the Mint, accompanied by Dr. Laura White, head of the history department at the University of Wyoming, who is now writing the life of Charles Sumner; Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, of the Social Security Board, accompanied by her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Woodward, of California; Mrs. John H. Whyte, the former Miss Evelyn Adams, who had with her Mrs. John Binns, of London; Mrs. R. Kirkpatrick Noble, Mrs. Wilbur W. Hubbard, immediate past president of the club; Mrs. Blair Banister, assistant United States Treasurer; Dr. Louise Stanley, Mrs. Charles J. Brand, chairman of membership; Mrs. James M. Slattery, wife of Senator Slattery, of Illinois.

Republican Fete Held at Wild Acres

The estate of Dr. and Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, Wild Acres, near Bethesda, was the scene of the annual spring fete of the League of Republican Women yesterday. Left to right are Mrs. G. Louis Weller, general chairman, Mrs. Grosvenor, Mrs. Edward E. Gann, president of the league, Dr. Grosvenor and Mrs. Frank W. Mondell, former president

Voters Honor Mrs. Ottenberg

Mrs. Louis Ottenberg, retiring president of the D. C. Voteless League of Women Voters, was guest of honor yesterday at a luncheon given by the board at Mrs. K's Toll House Tavern. Mrs. Charles Weston, chairman of government and its operation, presented her with a silver fountain pen as a token of appreciation from her co-workers.

Other board members who have been in the league for some years also spoke. Mrs. Basil Manly told of having been accompanied by Mrs. Ottenberg in 1920 on her way to the meeting at the home of Mrs. Gifford Pinchot, at which the local league was formed. Mrs. William Kittle, a former president, also spoke, as did Mrs. Albert Putnery, another past president; Mrs. Robert Leonard, first vice president, who has had charge of volunteer work at headquarters; Mrs. Edna Johnston, treasurer, and Mrs. Henry Chalmers, chairman of orientation.

Others present were Mrs. B. M. McKelway, Mrs. Franklin Ryan, Mrs. J. C. McCaskill, Mrs. P. W. Chappell, Mrs. Pearl Klein, Mrs. J. W. McKenzie, Mrs. C. S. Duncan, Mrs. Allan Moore, Mrs. M. O. Lorenz, Mrs. Joseph Low.

Tomorrow the league will have its annual meeting at Vacation Lodge of the Y. W. C. A. in Cherrydale, Va. The all-day business session, which will include election of officers, will begin at 11 o'clock interrupted by a recess from 12:30 to 2 for luncheon and a tour of the lodge and grounds. Department chairmen will discuss the league program and many members expect to have guests. If the weather is fair, the meeting will be out of doors.

D. C. Pen Women Observe National Poetry Week

The first of two programs in observance of National Poetry week was held last night at the Grafton Hotel studio of the National League of American Pen Women. Mrs. Frank Gillingham Morrill, internationally known for her theaterlogues, presented "Macbeth." There were also piano numbers by Felian Garzia.

Mrs. Inez Sheldon Tyler, president of the D. C. branch of the league, presided at the meeting, assisted by Dr. Charles Edward Russell, chairman of literature for the Arts Club, and Mrs. Corinne Chandler Davis, chairman of poetry for the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs.

Tonight, Dr. Russell will preside at a program at the Arts Club, assisted by Mrs. Tyler. Mrs. Augustus O. Thomas will discuss "Poe." Prize winning poems by local writers will be read by Miss Mattie Richards Tyler, Maurice Jarvis and Mrs. Tyler.

Dr. Oberholser to Speak

Dr. Harry C. Oberholser will address members of the Washington Club at 11 o'clock this morning, on "Bird Sanctuary Magic." Dr. Oberholser, whose lecture will be the last of the club season, is senior biologist of the U. S. Biological Survey.

Ridgely Chaplines Return From N. Y., Where She Showed Pictures of England

MR. AUD MRS. RIDGELY CHAPLINE have returned from New York, where they were guests of the English Speaking Union at Rockefeller Center, and Mrs. Chapline gave a travelogue showing her colored motion pictures taken two summers ago in Great Britain. The pictures included a close-up of King George and Queen Elizabeth at Aberystwyth, Wales, when the King dedicated the new wing of the National Library of Wales.

Mrs. Chapline and her two daughters accompanied Mr. Chapline to the British Isles, where he was sent as a delegate from the United States Department of Agriculture to the International Grasslands Congress. She has showed the pictures taken on their trip before several clubs in Washington, including the Arts Club, where she presented a program in April.

DEAN HELEN TAFT MANNING, of Bryn Mawr will address the Washington Alumnae Club this afternoon at the home of Mrs. Edward Morrison 4950 Hillbrook lane at 4 o'clock. Announcement also will be made of the results of the election of new officers of the alumnae group, in which the balloting was by mail. Mrs. James Rowe is president of the local club.

THE WOMEN MEMBERS of the bench and bar of New York will be hostesses for the testimonial dinner to be given tonight to a Washington woman attorney, Miss Laura M. Berrien, president of the National Association of Women Lawyers. The dinner will be given at University House, New York City. Judge Anna M. Kross is chairman of arrangements. The entire committee is made up of women judges, heads of the Women's Bar Association, State officers and many New York jurists.

A similar dinner was given Miss Berrien several weeks ago by the women lawyers of Atlanta in her home State of Georgia, at which many notables were guests, including the wife of the Governor.

A GET-TOGETHER for Panhellenic alumnae of the city has been arranged for tomorrow night at the Student Club of George Washington University, 2029 G street. Each of the 23 sororities in the Panhellenic Congress will send four representatives, including the Panhellenic delegate and, if it desires, a member of an active chapter.

Mrs. C. M. Jansky, of Alpha Gamma Delta, will speak on "The Relation of Alumnae to the Fraternity." There will also be a round-table discussion of "Reaching the Alumnae Membership," "Programs for Alumnae Meetings," "Relationship of Alumnae to Active Chapters" and "Unhealthy Campus Situations."

In the absence of Mrs. Leighton Johnston, of Alpha Delta Theta, retiring Panhellenic president, who is obliged to be out of town, Mrs. Ina L. Price, of Theta Upsilon, vice president, will preside. Mrs. Eugene Burgess, of Phi Omega Pi, is incoming president.

MRS. LLEWELLYN N. EDWARDS, national president of the Daughters of Founders and Patriots, who has been visiting State chapters in Rhode Island, Connecticut and Massachusetts, and attended the celebration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of the Massachusetts Society, is now at her home in Hampden Highlands, Me. Mrs. Samuel B. Woodbridge, national recording secretary, who accompanied her, is returning to Washington today after a brief visit with Wellesley friends in Massachusetts.

S. A. I. Alumnae Give Dinner

Miss Gertrude Evans, of Ithaca, N. Y., national president of Sigma Alpha Iota, and Mrs. Vashti Burr Whittington, president of the Women's National Professional Panhellenic Congress, were guests of honor last night at a dinner given by the local sorority alumnae at the clubhouse of the American Association of University Women.

Mrs. Evans talked on the activities of the national organization and Mrs. Whittington on the value of the professional Panhellenic Congress. Mrs. Hazel Brown Piers, retiring president of the local Sigma Alpha Iota Chapter, presided.

Mrs. Elma Cafke was installed as the new president of the local chapter; Mrs. Piers as vice president; Mrs. Grace Gaunmitz, recording secretary; Miss Christine Church, corresponding secretary; Miss Catherine Murray, treasurer.

The program was presented by Mrs. Florena Elliott, pianist, and Mrs. Susan Oliver, soprano.

Mr. Hachten to Speak

Mrs. Agnes Newman, chairman of the current events, will present Arthur Hachten, president of the National Press Club as the guest speaker at 5 o'clock this afternoon at the Women's City Club.

League of Republican Women Hold Garden Fete at Grosvenor's

Mrs. Grosvenor and Mrs. E. E. Gann, League President, Receive; Mme. Cantacuzene, Mrs. Borah and Mrs. Vandenberg Among Guests

The sun shone on the Grand Old Party yesterday. Despite the threat of rain in the early afternoon, skies were bright when guests began to arrive at the garden party of the League of Republican Women at Wild Acres, estate of Dr. and Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, near Bethesda.

Mrs. Grosvenor, who is just home from Florida, received, assisted by Mrs. Edward E. Gann, president of the league. The hostess wore a paisley print dress, trimmed with green, and Mrs. Gann was in French blue, with a broad-brimmed black hat trimmed with flowers. Dr. Grosvenor arrived home soon after the party started and joined the hostesses in welcoming guests. Miss Gloria Grosvenor, Miss Beverly Marshall and Miss Helen Davison sold cake and candy.

The cake table was in charge of Mrs. James E. Barnes and Mrs. J. H. Branson; the candy table, of Mrs. Paris H. Brengle and Miss Pauline Block.

Mrs. William H. Scott, secretary of the league, who took tickets at the door, assisted by Mrs. Joseph Dellinger and Mrs. Dawes Brisbane, also was in charge of a table at which little elephant banks were sold. These novel souvenirs were marked "Save your pennies for the G. O. P. in 1940." More than 100 were sold and purchasers will fill them and return them to the league headquarters, where the only key to them is kept. There the contents will be added to the party fund.

Arrange 100 Tables for Bridge

Guests played cards on the terrace and lawn and in the library and drawing room of the house. There were 100 tables. Many who did not play came later for tea and the program of the Telephone Glee Club. The chorus sang on the lawn, where only the evening songs of birds broke the stillness, as they blended with the men's voices.

Wild Acres is noted for its birds and is reputed to have a greater number to the acre than any place in that section. These and the iris, weigelia and rhododendron blooming in the gardens were the subject of much comment. Inside the house were also many things of interest, among them the mahogany doors in the library brought from the house in New England built by Dr. Grosvenor's great-great grandfather Taft.

Mrs. G. Louis Weller was general chairman of the fete. Among committee members assisting were Mrs. Howard F. Leroy and Mrs. William Mutchler, tables; Mrs. Edson Briggs, publicity; Mrs. Frisby Eiker and Miss Daisy Prentice, prizes; Miss Edna Patton and Mrs. Edward L. Dyer, refreshments; Mrs. Webster Dawley and Mrs. F. S. Whitman.

Mrs. Speel, Club Founder, Present

Among the guests were Mrs. Virginia White Speel, national committeewoman for the District and founder of the club; Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenberg, Mme. Cantacuzene and Mrs. Frank Mondell, former presidents; Mrs. William E. Borah, Mrs. James J. Davis, Mrs. William Corby, who has just returned from a visit with her daughter in Europe; Mrs. George C. Thorpe, who arrived after having stopped briefly at the Democratic fete also; Lady Leslie, Mrs. A. R. Bailey, Mrs. William H. Wheat, Mrs. Lewis K. Rockefeller, Mrs. Robert McKinley, Miss Catherine Newton, Mrs. Franklin Kean, Mrs. Ben Webster, Mrs. R. W. Baker, Mrs. Daniel A. Reed.

Also Mrs. Ben Fisher, Mrs. Roy Palmer, Mrs. E. G. Schafer, Mrs. William C. Hanson, Mrs. William Leetch, Mrs. Ralph Endicott, Mrs. John Wolfe, Mrs. H. P. Baxter, Mrs. Merle Thorpe, Mrs. George L. Hart, jr., Mrs. James C. Wilkes, Mrs. Charles Robinson, of New York; Mrs. William S. Covell, Mrs. Karl D. Mundt, Mrs. Francis H. Case, Mrs. St. John Greble, Mrs. James Henry Harper, Mrs. Emory Cox, of Norfolk, Mrs. Robert H. McNeill, Mrs. Whitman Cross, Mrs. Anne Archbold, Mrs. F. H. Whitman, Mrs. Harry L. Englebright, Mrs. Godfrey Hunter, Mrs. Homer Philips, Mrs. Thad Brown, Mrs. Louis Caldwell, Mrs. Oscar Bland, Mrs. Frank Mondell, jr., and Mrs. William Mondell, Mrs. Wallace Dempsey and Mrs. Emerson Howe.

Garden Fete Set At Convent Today

The annual garden party at the Convent of the Perpetual Adoration will take place this afternoon after the blessing of the vestments at 4:30 in the chapel of the Convent at 1419 V street, under the auspices of the Board of Lady Managers of the Association of Work for Poor Churches.

The brick-walled garden of the convent will be open to visitors. A group of singers from southern Maryland will entertain, while an international supper, featuring dishes from many lands, will be served from 5 to 7.

Proceeds from the garden party are devoted to the work of the Association of Work for Poor Churches and Missions.

Smith College Club to Meet

The Smith College Club will hold its final meeting of the season at the home of Mrs. John W. Guider, 34 Kalorama Circle, at 5 p. m. today. Preceding the business meeting and election of officers there will be an informal picnic supper on the order of the old-fashioned "box social." New by-laws will be voted on, scholarships for one or more Washington girls discussed, and other committee reports presented covering the year's work.

Thornton Wilder's one-act play, "The Happy Journey from Trenton to Camden," a forerunner of his famous "Our Town," will be given by four of the younger Smith alumnae, under the direction of Sally Stewart. In the cast are Mrs. Betty Bates Nichols, Miss Margot Chase, Miss Betty McBride and Miss Annis Reed.

Presiding at the business meeting will be Mrs. Frederick J. Libby, president of the club for the past two years.

Systematic Guidance Urged For Washington Schools

Support for a comprehensive and systematic program of guidance for the Washington schools was urged by Dr. Mitchell Dreese, of George Washington University in an address last night before the local Business and Professional Women's Club. The dinner meeting was at the Dodge Hotel with Miss Nina Kinsella, retiring president, presiding and Mrs. H. L. Rust, director of Marionettes, Inc., as the second speaker.

Dr. Dreese, who is chairman of the Public Action Committee of the Guidance and Personnel Association of the District, quoted from the report which his committee submited last November to Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools.

Its recommendations, he said, included those for trained counselors for each secondary school, and an administration officer responsible for a city-wide program of guidance for public schools. He would co-ordinate a comprehensive guidance program; collect occupational and educational information available to teachers and pupils, direct research concerned with pupil adjustment; promote close relationship between such departments as school attendance, work permits, the research department; statistics office and department of vocational education.

Mrs. Rust's talk, devoted to the arts and crafts which go into the making and operation of marionettes, was followed by a marionette performance. There was also music presented by Mrs. Jewell Downs.

The dinner was in charge of Miss Daisy Reed, of the education committee of the club.

Gallinger Plan Works, Ruhland Says

Denies Before Senate Sub-committee He Criticized Work Of Visiting Doctors

Health Officer George C. Ruhland yesterday told the Senate sub-committee on District appropriations that the recent Gallinger Hospital agreement is operating satisfactorily. At the same time he denied, under questioning by Senator Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, that he had criticized the work of visiting physicians.

Dr. Ruhland, who was asked about a letter dealing with the Gallinger row, stated that he had engaged in no unethical conduct and had made only factual statements with regard to the hospital's administration.

Because of the agreement between the Commissioners and heads of Georgetown and George Washington medical schools, the District heads asked that the position of chief medical officer at $7,500 be stricken from the supply bill. They explained that the medical schools will pay for the service as well as recommend the official to the Commissioners.

Salaries Attached

The $5,600-a-year salaries of the chief resident physicians were attacked by members of the sub-committee, and Dr. Ruhland was asked to furnish data on the cost of similar services in other cities and the compensation of the physicians prior to their appointment. It was stated that similar jobs in other municipal hospitals draw between $1,200 and $2,000 a year.

The Commissioners asked the sub-committee to restore $5,600 to the bill for continuation of the post of business manager, who was eliminated by the House, and $7,000 for personnel, which the House held could be saved.

Dr. Ruhland advocated that the Health Department appropriations be apportioned in lump sums for the four major activities of the department instead of for each detailed function. He also urged that recent recommendations of the U. S. Public Health Service be put into effect as soon as possible

44-Hour Week Discussed

The cost and personnel additions necessary to place all the municipal hospital employes on a 44-hour week were discussed, but Auditor Daniel J. Donovan pointed out that the Budget Bureau had reduced the Commissioners' estimates in this regard. He also said that welfare institutions also have employes on long-hour weeks.

Sixty-one additional employes at a cost of $70,000 would be needed to place Gallinger on a complete 44-hour week, the sub-committee was told.

Dr. Ruhland explained the reasons for a delay in operating on a Gallinger patient whose case had been brought to the attention of the sub-committee. The man was not operated on because of a difference in diagnosis, Dr. Ruhland said, and then was sent to Emergency Hospital for expert examination. His condition was never acute.

Today the sub-committee will hear more civic representatives. Hearings are expected to be concluded by the middle of the week.

Capital News In Brief

Nurses Televise

Sibley Memorial Hospital was "Television Station SMH to 22 graduating nurses who reproduced a television broadcast of the future in the annual class night play at the hospital last night.

Participating in the "Private Premier Television Broadcast" were the following girls who will be graduated today: Lillian Ely, Grace Anderson, Betty Baumberger, Marjorie Ellis, Naomi Green, Alice Hedges, Delia Harrell, Elizabeth Lucas, Margaret McMillan, Barbara Smith, Eleanor Stewart, Dorothy Thomas, Shirley Wallace and Cynthia Willard.

3 Canoeists Rescued

Three men last night were rescued from the waters of Georgetown Channel when their canoe overturned off Virginia avenue and Rock Creek Parkway.

Hearing the cries of the canoeists, four employes of the Washington Gas Light Co.'s west station rowed out to the men and hauled them from the water.

Rescued were Frank Castle, 23, of 1160 Fourth street northeast; Wilmer Padgett, 34, of 810 D street northeast, and James McKay, 23, of 1240 U street southeast.

Okay, Boys, Peel 'Em Off

District station house policeman will have the same chances of keeping cool as other shirt-sleeved Capital residents this summer—if they keep that well-tailored appearance.

A memo to precinct captains from Inspector J. G. Stott yesterday declared, "While on duty inside stations on houses all members of the Police Department may remove their coats, providing they are not wearing suspenders and are wearing regulation belts."

Trolley Hits Woman

Catherine Blandy, 63, of 2512 L street northwest, was knocked down by a street car last night at Fourteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest and suffered bruises on her head, arms and legs. She had just got off the car and was crossing the road in front of it, when it started up again, police said. She was treated at Emergency Hospital.

Hail Damages Trees

Winchester, Va., May 22 (AP).—Considerable hail during the past two days cut narrow swaths across northern Virginia, causing some injury to orchards in this area.

Funds Decline, Repairs Climb, P.-T.A. Told

School Masonry Needs Rebuilding, R.A.Maurer, Board Official, Says

Despite a "growing need" for repairs in District public schools, Congressional appropriations are falling off, not increasing, Robert A. Maurer, vice president of the school board, declared last night at a meeting of the Central High School Parent-Teacher Association.

"The need for funds to rectify wear and tear is constantly growing because Washington schools are so extensively used both for education and community purposes," Maurer said in pointing out school administration is faced with constant appropriations cuts.

Maurer pointed out that particularly in need of repair is masonry in District schools. If concrete of Central High School stadium is not repaired condemnation may eventually be necessary, he said.

Fire Funds Urged

Restoration of a $56,000 item cut from the District Fire Department appropriation in Congress was urged in a resolution adopted last night by the Trinidad Citizens Association.

With the steady volume of construction in the District, any reduction in funds for fire protection would be "false economy," the group asserted.

The association also called for enlargement of present schools for colored children rathen than construction of new buildings at different locations. Erection of new buildings for Wilson Teacher's College was also recommended.

Miss Effenbach Loses

Miss Leah Effenbach, of 1510 Nineteenth street northwest, finalist in the piano division of the National Federation of Music Clubs competition in Baltimore, was defeated last night by Samuel Sorin, of Detroit, the Associated Press reported. Sorin received $1,000 and an engagement to play with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Gruen Speaks At Meeting of Horologists

Tells of Advances In Watch-Making During Depression

Technological improvements in the depression have greatly improved the watches available to the general public, Fred G. Gruen, of the Gruen Watch Co., told the Horological Institute of America yesterday at the annual meeting at the Bureau of Standards.

"Today we are able to make small inexpensive watches which 10 years ago we thought impossible. The public now gets smaller, better-styled watches than formerly and at less cost."

Start Chain Production

Emphasizing that his own company has factories both in Switzerland and the United States, he said he believed "in a watch the public receives greater value for its money than in any other piece of mechanical merchandise."

Gruen also stressed the fact that many of the systems of line production and high precision standardization used in the automobile industry had been copied from the watch industry.

G. E. Shubrooks, chief chemist of the Hamilton Watch Co., pointed out that improved metallurgical methods had aided in the production of better watches.

Other speakers and their subjects were J. Friestadter, superintendent, Waltham Watch Co., "Development of the Watch Industry in the United States;" Louis Levin, publisher of Horology, "Practical Bench Work," and B. W. Heald, president of the United Horological Association of America, "The Future of State Legislation."

Court's Ukase (Page and a Half) Urges Brevity

The Court of Appeals is tired of prolix and frivolous records.

Using a page and a half of their opinion in a statement of their reasons for not interfering with a damage suit by Lorenz and Monica Kerschbaum against the American Electrotype Co., the court cut loose on legal wordiness yesterday.

"We have been confronted with records running as high as 1,000 pages," said the opinion, "which might easily have been reduced to one fourth that number if counsel had exhibited a desire to save the court from unnecessary consumption of time.

"The practice of dumping into the record unnecessary papers and cumulative evidence, besides the drain upon the court's time, frequently results in making cost of litigation prohibitive to the man of moderate means and creates a scandal in the administration of justice."

Pound Will Speak

Roanoke, Va., May 22 (AP).—Roscoe Pound, dean emeritus of Harvard Law School, will address the Roanoke Bar Association at its dinner June 19, at Hotel Roanoke, John Strickler, president, announced today.

Lincoln Camp Plans Services At Mount Olivet

Plans for Memorial Day services of Lincoln Camp No. 2, Sons of Veterans of the Civil War, were announced last night by Michael Casey, chairman of the committee in charge of arrangements, at a meeting in the Willard Hotel. The services will be held on May 28 at Mount Olivet Cemetery.

The group adopted a resolution protesting the admission charge at the Ford Theater and other patriotic shrines. Commander Palsgrove, of Cushing Camp, spoke on the proper observance of Memorial Day.

Bible Is Real Textbook of Democracy, Says Bishop Freeman at Dinner

To distribute the Bible is to teach the democratic way of life, Rome A. Betts, associate secretary of the American Bible Society, told a group of Congressmen and civic leaders last night at a Bible Month dinner in the Mayflower Hotel.

In its emphasis on the individual personality the Bible contains the underlying theory of democracy, said Betts. Bishop James E. Freeman declared that the teaching of the Bible was "never more urgently needed than now."

An account of the work the Society has done in Washington was given by Dr. Edgar Cordell Powers, secretary of the National Capital District of the society. Nearly 14,000 Bibles had been distributed in Washington in the last year, he said, by the Federation of Churches and through the Metropolitan Police Boys Clubs with the co-operation of Major Ernest W. Brown.

Among those present were Senators Lundeen (Farmer-Labor), of Minnesota and Davis (Republican), Pennsylvania; Representative Kinzer (Republican), Pennsylvania; Sparkman (Democrat), Alabama; Kitchens (Democrat), Arkansas and Curtis (Republican), Nebraska; Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines and Judge Fred M. Vinson, Senator Radcliffe (Democrat), Maryland, was chairman, and Dr. George G. Dilworth, secretary of the Atlantic Agency of the society, gave the closing prayer.

Suspected Sniper Gets Life Term

Sentenced for Attempted Criminal Attack; Faces Second Trial

Jesse Paul Parker, 25-year-old colored man, was sentenced to life imprisonment in Montgomery County Court yesterday for assault with intent to criminally attack a white woman, 35, on the grounds of the Chevy Chase Elementary School December 22.

A separate trial was called in an attack the same night on a young colored woman who, it was learned, is expected to testify that the man identified himself to her as the sniper who terrorized Northwest Washington and nearby Montgomery County last fall.

The colored woman previously told police that Parker had threatened her with a gun and admitted being the sniper. Her testimony was cut short yesterday on the objection of Defense Attorney Thomas Dawson.

Prosecutor Asks Second Trial

The separate trial was requested by State's Attorney Ben G. Wilkinson after Judges Charles W. Woodward and Stedman Prescott pronounced sentence in the first case.

Testifying in the first case, the 35-year-old woman said Parker grabbed her as she walked on Hillcrest place near the Chevy Chase Elementary School, dragged her to the school grounds and attempted to attack her. He desisted, she said, after she pleaded with him and told of a recent illness.

Amos R. Rickman, Capital Transit bus driver, testified he saw Parker follow the woman off his bus at Hillcrest place and Connecticut avenue.

No Date for Second Trial

The colored woman declared Parker approached her in Rosemary lane 15 minutes after the first attempt. He asked her directions to a Chevy Chase address and walked home with her, the woman said, before her testimony was objected to.

After pronouncing the life sentence in the first case Judge Woodward asked Wilkinson if the State wanted to hold a separate trial in view of the heavy sentence in the assault of the white woman.

Wilkinson replied that he thought the second trial advisable in view of the many "ramifications" of the case. No date for the second trial was set, however.

Bigamist Mate On Trial in Death Of Mrs. Nichols

Clarence E. Nichols went on trial yesterday for first degree murder in the death of his wife last autumn after her discovery he had had another wife when he married her.

Dr. Christopher J. Murphy, deputy coroner, told the jury how Mrs. Viola Katherine Nichols, 32, was found strangled and beaten to death in her bedroom. Nichols, a 29-year-old plumber, was unconscious in the next room. The gas jets were on.

The Fire Rescue Squad revived the man and the police reported he confessed attacking his wife with a rolling pin when she reproached him for having another wife in Pennsylvania from whom he was not divorced.

Burkinshaw Named McLean Counsel

Attorney Neil Burkinshaw was named yesterday to administer the affairs of Edward B. McLean here, succeeding Admiral Mark H. Bristol, who died recently.

Birkinshaw was Bristol's counsel. Justice Laws gave him the assignment temporarily because a number of lawsuits involving the $10,000,000 McLean estate are waiting disposal.

The appointment leaves pending the petition of John R. (Jock) McLean, eldest son of the former sportsman, that he be placed in charge of the McLean property.

City Manager Approved by Civic Group

Mid-City Citizens Also Favor Abbott School At 14th and Upshur Site

Establishment of a city manager form of Government here was approved last night by the Mid-City Citizens Association.

The group also approved construction of the new central library at John Marshall place and Pennsylvania avenue northwest and went on record in favor of placing the new Abbott Vocational School at Fourteenth and Upshur streets northwest.

Support for the pending Congressional measure providing for regulation of optometrical practice here was voted by the association at the meeting in the Thomson School, Twelfth and L streets northwest. A. J. Driscoll presided.

North Capitol

Scientific investigation of all traffic accidents won unanimous support of the North Capitol Citizens Association at its final meeting for the season.

The organization also adopted a resolution favoring issuance of warrants by the corporation counsel rather than private individuals for the arrest of law violators involved in accidents.

Consolidation of all playground and recreational facilities under the Board of Education was urged, to eliminate conflicting jurisdictions and improve administration. E. B. Lawless presided.

Society of Natives

Louis Bowdler was unanimously re-elected president of the Society of Natives of the District of Columbia last night and at the same time was made a delegate to the Federation of Citizens Associations.

Other officers elected were John M. Howard, first vice president; Mrs. William L. Broaddus, second vice president; Henry W. Samson, third vice president, re-elected; Miss Ardell Payne, recording secretary, re-elected; Miss Mamie D. Sobotka, corresponding secretary; Frederick G. Umhau, treasurer, re-elected; James H. Duhamel, historian, re-elected, and Jesse C. Suter, delegate to the federation, re-elected.

The meeting was the last of the season. Monthly sessions will be resumed in September.

Georgetown

The Georgetown Citizens Association last night heard a talk on traffic safety and pedestrian control by H. V. Schreiber, and voted to join the new Georgetown Community Conference, composed of five Georgetown civic organizations and designed to further co-operation in matters of common welfare.

Three new members were admitted, Paul M. Schubert, Thomas M. Woodward, and Richard A. Mahar. The association will not meet again until October.

'Confessions of Nazi Spy' Glorifies Americanism

Warner Film Is Previewed by the Press; 'Arms and the Man,' Tonight at Wardman; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

"CONFESSIONS OF A NAZI SPY," unreeled for the drama desks by the Warner Brothers yesterday afternoon, brings an unique dramatic pattern to the screen. It is, primarily, the most vigorous sort of propaganda for sheer, unadulterated Americanism. It is, furthermore, at times a tense and exciting exposition of the workings of the Federal agencies intrusted with the task of stamping out foreign spying, espionage and sabotage in this country—a business that takes on all of the color and suspense of the most melodramatic detective fiction. But last, and most important, is the consideration that the basic content of "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" is unequivocally and provably factual.

BELL

Based on material gathered by Leon G. Turrou, former agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the man credited with having "broken the German spy ring," this picture devotes a great deal of its footage to rehabilitating on the screen the events that led to the famous spy trials in New York some months ago, as a result of which certain culprits now are languishing in prison and others hiding out safely in their Fatherland.

There is no implication here that the disclosures of the screen story relate neither to persons nor events that are actual and that any similarity is purely coincidental. The whole thing is all very actual. It represents a screen reflection of newspaper headlines that dominated the press for many days when the spy trial was on.

Perhaps it is for this reason that "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" seems less a conventional screen play than it does a glorified documentary reel, executed something after the manner of "The March of Time," with its melodramatic moments merely interlarded among its disclosures of recent history. There is even the voice of the commentator coming through now and again to knit a little more closely together the slightly diffused chronology of the events that are depicted. Newsreel clips also are introduced at frequent intervals to point the aggressive nature of the regime now holding the upper hand in Germany. There has never been a feature release quite like this one in either content or contour. It is, as I have said, unique. I found it almost continuously engrossing—not always as drama, but at least as a vivid commentary upon what is going on in these United States under sinister foreign auspices.

Takes Punch at Hitler

The Warner Brothers have had the courage to make no bones about Hitler. They name him and picture him in many vital sequences. The other members of the high command in the Reich are identifiable, although not named by name like the Fuehrer. If you read Freddie Othman's Hollywood column on this page yesterday you know by now that the player who impersonates the German minister of propaganda was Martin Kosleck, a young man who, when not acting, is a painter. He does a conspicuously fine job of delineating a character that is not too popular in this country. The cast of the picture is long and there are many in it who contribute exceptionally fine work to a film that has had no counterpart in the history of the cinema, to the best of my knowledge and belief.

While Edward G. Robinson, as the F. B. I. agent, is nominally star of "Confessions of a Nazi Spy," it seemed to me yesterday afternoon that the most arduous and most commendable work of all was turned in by Paul Lukas, in the role of Dr. Kassel, arch conspirator in behalf of the Reich. Mr. Robinson is by no means negligible and neither are Francis Lederer, as the weakling spy who "spills the beans;" George Sanders, as Schlager, or Lya Lys, or Grace Stafford.

You will be defrauding ourself of a fine opportunity to learn why you ought to nurture your Americanism if you fail to see "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" when it opens on the Earle screen Friday.

A great many of the names included in the long cast of "Confessions" are new and heretofore unknown to this column. To the Warners and Director Anatole Litvak, nevertheless, I wish to pay tribute for as consistently fine "type" casting as I ever have seen on the screen. There is not, in a manner of speaking, a "wrong guy" in the lot.

The Washington Civic Theater makes its final gesture of the season by presenting George Bernard Shaw's satirical comedy of "Arms and the Man," opening in Wardman Park Theater tonight and continuing through Saturday. It was upon the story of this play that the libretto of the famous Strauss operetta, "The Chocolate Soldier," was founded. That is the one for which Strauss wrote "My Hero" as part of his score. Sopranos and tenors have been annoying you with it ever since. I never have heard it sung so well as Ida Brooks Hunt sang it in the original production of the work in the Casino Theater, in New York, in 1908. That was the night Avita Sanchez, the only Puerto Rican prima donna ever to grace the American stage, and I sat immediately in front of Maude Lambert and Emma Carus and had quite a time of it, everything considered.

But the point is that "Arms and the Man" will be on the Wardman stage for the remainder of this week, at prices ranging from 50 cents to $1.50. It has been well cast and, of course, well directed by F. Cowles Strickland.

Since there seems to be no end to this thing, it might be noted that the Twentieth Century-Fox production of "Rose of Washington Square" will be previewed by the guys and gals of the drama desks today at 1:30. This is the one costarring Alice Faye, Tyrone Power and Al Jolson. It is said that Jolson makes a terrific comeback in this subject. I didn't know he had been away. "Rose of Washington Square" is scheduled to open at Loew's Palace on June 1. So now you know.

"Moonlight Sonata," in a revival engagement, and "North Sea," comprising next week's bill at the Little Theater, will be shown at a late preview on Ninth street tonight. The regular week's run will begin tomorrow morning. "Moonlight Sonata" is the only film in which Ignace Paderewski, famous Polish concert artist and statesman, ever has appeared. Marie Tempest, distinguished British actress, appears in his support. "North Sea," a breath-taking, 20-minute documentary subject, was filmed aboard a British trawler during an actual storm at sea.

I told you Columbia Pictures was a big one. The 1939-40 production schedule calls for 40 features, 16 "Westerns," 130 short subjects and 4 serials, at an increased cost of $5,000,000 over any previous year in the company's history. Nice going is what that high-strung, Southern gentleman, Sam Galanty, will say.

Simple-Arithmetic Note

Well, $5,000,000 more is nice going. If I had $5,000,000 more, I'd have, roughly, $4,999,999!

The Gentle and Benevolent Face of a Nazi Spy

FRANCIS LEDERER

it is who plays this repugnant character of Kurt Schneider, amateur espionage agent for the Nazi government in the United States, in the Warner Brothers production of "Confessions of a Nazi Spy." Since Mr. Lederer is a Czech acter, once head of a great peace organization, one suspects that he enjoyed making his role seem as obnoxious as possible. "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" opens Friday on the Earle screen

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, May 22.

LEON HENDERSON, the New Deal economist who became a Securities & Exchange Commissioner, arrived in New York from Washington . . . Before his departure he saw Constantin Oumansky, the new Russian Ambassador . . . "Are you going to see the Fair?" Oumansky asked . . . "Yes," said Henderson . . . "Then here are two passes to the Soviet Pavilion," said the Russian Ambassador . . . He delivered the passes and whispered: "It's propaganda."

GENE TUNNEY, whose principal job now is with American Distillers, has given up drinking—because of his enthusiasm for Moral Rearmament . . . P. M., the Graphic Arts magazine, was banned from the mails. The postal authorities objected to the illustrations drawn by Peter Arno, Abner Dean, Wallace Morgan and other members of the Society of Illustrators . . . Al Smith, who just returned from California, has told friends that next year he'll gratify his life's ambition—and visit the Holy Land . . . The movie version of "It Can't Happen Here" will adopt some of the March of Time style . . . Ethel Merman's maid and Mildred Natwick's maid shared a sweepstakes ticket which drew a nonstarter—and so won $1,800.

JOSEPH W. BROOKS, son-in-law of Capt. J. M. Patterson, has purchased an interest in and will become the publisher of Broun's Nutmeg . . . On Thursday Broun went to the White House to deliver to the President a copy of the new Nutmeg, autographed by all its writers—except one . . . The lone holdout, who refused to autograph the President's copy, was Stanley High, former member of Roosevelt's Brain Trust.

URSULLA PARROTT is worrying her magazine editors, because, she hasn't written a single line since her remarriage. Ursulla also is nursing a broken toe . . . George White confessed yesterday that this month he expects to achieve his biennial quota of 4,550 enemies. "It's so easy, too," White explained. "I have a chorus call—5,000 respond—and I can hire only 50" . . . Orson Welles is determined to present his ill-fated production of "The Fire Kings" in New York next season . . . "You'll produce it next year—or bust, eh?" Welles' associate suggested . . . "Oh, no," he replied. "I'll produce it—but the bust was this year."

JIMMY DURANTE, who purchased a one-horse racing stable, was disconsolate the other night . . . The horse, Westbrooke, had won—the last time out—and was scheduled to run again at Suffolk Downs . . . Durante had advised his friends to bet on Westbrooke . . . Unfortunately, the horse was pocketed, broke its leg and had to be destroyed . . . "There's some consolation, though," his trainer phoned. "Before the race started, the horse was claimed by some other man. Now he must pay you $1,400—and also pay $15 extra for carting the horse's body away from the track."

ELIZABETH ARDEN visited the Rainbow Room and commented on Mary Martin's lovely complexion. "Your skin shows exquisite care," the beautician complimented. "Yes," Mary assured her, "—with soap and water" . . . Gordon Wiles, Fox Films' director, who once won an Academy award, disappeared from Hollywood and his studio has been unable to locate him. Wiles quit his film assignment to rush East in response to a telegram from Lew Brown, and yesterday started directing Brown's new musical . . . Diana Barrymore, daughter of John, wanted to try summer stock, but her mother, Michael Strange, took her away from temptation.

MAX GORDON and George S. Kaufman sat in Lindy's and read the obituary written about one of their friends . . . "You never think about such things yourself, do you, George?" asked Gordon . . . "My only worry about that," replied Kaufman, "is that the newspapers would print all the gags attributed to me—and that they'd all be bad ones."

NUNNALLY JOHNSON will write the screen play for "Hollywood Cavalcade," which will show, in technicolor, the history of Hollywood, from the custard pie-throwing days through the silent-film era and up to modern sound. Mack Sennett will direct the Keystone Comedy sequences . . . Thomas E. Dewey already is thinking of 1944. He has confided that he'd rather oppose Roosevelt in the 1940 election than four years later. Dewey would like to remove this Democratic threat now—and feels that Rosevelt would be stronger as a '44 candidate . . . The movie adaptation of Vincent Sheean's "Personal History" not only changed the original story considerably but added an anti-Soviet ending.

Picture Folk Prove Capable Of Many Jobs

When you meet some Hollywood notable and ask him what he does around the studio, get ready for a long answer.

Today may be an age of specialization and all that, but ambidexterity or doubling-up or whatever it's called is the rule around the movie marts, not the exception.

There's Cecil B. De Mille, a jack-of-all-movie-trades if ever there was one. He began his career as an actor, and now he is a producer-director-writer-talent scout-business manager. He serves in all these capacities with a score of aides, for his new transportation epic, "Union Pacific."

There are many directors who have acquired enough prestige, experience and independence to become their own producers, among them Frank Lloyd, Wesley Ruggles, William A. Wellman, Robert Z. Leonard and many others.

Among those who make their living in front of the cameras, Bob Hope probably has as wide a range of activity as anyone around these parts. He does the leading role in his new comedy, "Never Say Die," and also wrote a lot of his laugh lines. He also sings, dances and does a major share of the writing for his own radio program. In addition, he has written an original movie story for Harold Lloyd and is working on a play.

Jack Benny and Bing Crosby are in much the same category. Benny cavorts on the screen for "Man About Town" and helps write his air show. Some say he also is a musician, although musicians deny this.

Songs Augment Music for 'Babes'

Two songs by Yip Harburg and Harold Arlen, "God's Country" and "Let's Take a Walk Around the Block," were purchased for inclusion in the forthcoming musical, "Babes in Arms." Harburg and Arlen also wrote the songs for "The Wizard of Oz."

The two numbers will be in addition to the Larry Hart and Dick Rodgers songs in the original stage show.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, May 22 (INS).—Irene Dunne is the courageous lady who will risk the critical gantlet by playing Hilda Johnson in the revamped "Front Page," now called "The Bigger They Come." Right off the bat, Irene will have to sell the cash customers and the critics the idea that a girl reporter can be as exciting as Lee Tracy made Hildy in the original Ben Hecht - Charlie MacArthur play. I still don't know why they happened to switch the top role from a man to a femme reporter, but Harry Cohn doesn't make many mistakes in box office judgment.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Irene will be aided and abetted in her hot journalistic career by having Cary Grant as her co-star. This kills any chance of Cary's eventually being free to make movie love to Garbo in "Ninotchka," since Howard Hawks and Scripter Charlie Lederer were putting the finishing touches on "The Bigger They Come" at Palm Springs over the week-end.

In my wildest moments, I'd never thought of Robert Montgomery for any role like Sarason, the dictator, in "It Can't Happen Here." But with Orson Welles definitely out of the running because he couldn't or wouldn't get together with M-G-M, Bob will probably be handed the role tomorrow morning. I hear he staged a very smart campaign for the part, taking producer Lucien Hubbard into the projection room to see "Night Must Fall," in which he turned in as neat a little horror performance as you'd care to see. Hubbard is completely sold and now it only remains to convince Director Woody Van Dyke that Bob is the perfect type. If he gets the part—and he's dead set on it—he will do "It Can't Happen Here" before he sails for London and "The Earl of Chicago."

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: George Brent, arrayed in carpet slippers, with Bette Davis, having a heck of an argument over something or other at Cafe Lamaze; maybe it's spring informality but Greta Garbo, in slacks, was wandering through the farmers' market, eating corn on the cob; friends of Jack Ragan (former husband of Alice Joyce Brown and father of her daughter, Peggy), shocked to hear of his passing in New York; Elsie Janis back in Hollywood for the summer and a rest, after an across-the-country motor trip from Boston; Sonja Henie, usually such a serious little person, laughing a lot with Lee Bowman at the Troc; Eleanor Powell, who used to go with Abe Lyman, doing New York with Teddy Powell, former banjo player in Abe's band; Errol Flynn's mother and father and his sister, Rosemary, leaving Belfast to visit their pride and joy in Hollywood for the summer. Maybe they can help Warners keep track of him for a while.

Mary Healy, who gets around with a lot of beaux, at Victor Hugo's with Edgar Bergen, who gets around himself; Bee Lillie sails on the Queen Mary, Wednesday, for England; Anita Loos, Mr. and Mrs. Ernst Lubitsch and Henry Koster sponsoring the Assistance League play, "At Your Service," tomorrow night to raise money for talented European youngsters; James Reardon is the boy friend waiting these evenings to take Gertrude Niesen home from Marcel's; what's happened to the Rhea Gable-Mike Frankovich dueting? He was out again with Binnie Barnes at the Beverly Tropics; Norman Krasna doesn't think Margot Stevenson in temperamental, cause they're together everywhere; the Paramounters feted Walter Damrosch at a studio luncheon today.

That's all for today—but remember, tomorrow is another stint.

Photographed in Bed

Akim Tamiroff spent the least exciting day of his screen career when he spent 12 hours in bed while the cameras were turned on him for scenes in "The Magnificent Fraud."

Back in Character

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., May 22.—You've heard many times that the English wars have been won on the cricket field at Eton. When you see "Good-Bye Mr. Chips" you'll realize how true that statement is. I'm sure when they produced it they never intended to make it the greatest pro-peace entertainment yet seen on the screen. That's exactly what it is. They can make a hundred anti this or that pictures but they won't pack the punch that "Mr. Chips" does. Because his is a life packed with humor, humanity and humility.

HOPPER

And we owe it to the genius of Irving Thalberg, who bought the story for $4,000 in the face of much opposition. He got the author of "Journey's End," Mr. Sheriff, to do the adaptation. And if you'll go back in your history, you'll remember the tempest in a teapot four years ago when Irving cast Charles Laughton as the schoolmaster, which brought thousands of letters of protest, exactly what Mr. Thalberg wanted.

If they'd searched the world, they couldn't have found a better actor for the part than Robert Donat. And Greer Garson, who was left to cool her heels here for over a year without an assignment, has more real charm, femininity and ability than you'll find in half a dozen of our screen stars. Bits are so well done you never have the feeling they're acted.

And this was made in England at the time they were building shelters for the next war. I'm wondering why Metro has to travel to England to make its best pictures. It's author, James Hilton, was at the preview without his beautiful Russian bride. Wonder why?

Lucille Watson told me of the Crown Prince Olav and Crown Princess Martha's visit to "The Women" at Metro. "We were doing a scene, George Cukor, Norma Shearer and I," she said. "Over and over, to get just the right shading. Suddenly Mr. Cukor stopped, looked around at a group of visitors watching and said: 'Do you know, I have a feeling we should do something about meeting these charming people.'"

What a yell went up on "Memory of Love" set while Cary Grant was dying when the scene was interrupted by loud snoring. Charles Coburn, who plays his father, had fallen asleep.

The reason so many kids like to dine at Bob Murphy's is because of their Manhattan cocktails. They don't know it, but there's not a drop of liquor in 'em. But do they look potent?

Bob's new room with the George McManus sketches is really something. And George himself is there practically every other night as host.

With most of our writers working overtime on biographies of everyone, wonder why someone doesn't glorify our own profession and do the story of Edwin Booth? It is so rich in historical import. After his brother Wilkes shot Lincoln, Edward retired from the stage for one year, and it took much persuasion from all his friends and the public to get him back. But the night he returned his ovation lasted 17 minutes.

Paul Muni was very much embarrassed the other night when, coming out of a theater, the doorman called for Mr. Muni's car. But a fan standing nearby yelled: "Mr. Muni's bicycle, please."

Understand Meriam C. Cooper has $250,000 sunk in a new film fantasy. But no story to pin it on!

Trans-Lux

The unprecedented American visit of England's King and Queen occupied first place among the interesting news shots of the current week's program at the Trans-Lux Theater. The film shows the royal ship entering the St. Lawrence and docking at Quebec, then the hearty welcome and public reception of their majesties, with some fine closeups; and, before immense crowds that jammed the streets, the triumphal tour across the Plains of Abraham to the Hall of Parliament, and the stirring scenes there.

Other highlight items in this part of the program include a thought-provoking flash of the coal strike situation in Harlan, Ky.; an illustration of the new Government relief plan to distribute surplus commodities; a demonstration of the new plastic material that pipes light, as wire transmits electricity, and makes it possible to curve light around corners; a thrilling exhibition of Uncle Sam's unmatched pursuit planes 9,000 feet aloft.

Among the short subjects is a beautiful travelogue on Peru and Bolivia. The plane trip over the Andes covers some remarkable scenes of the ruins of the Inca civilization.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The founding fathers didn't mention it in the U. S. Constitution when they made provisions for the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, but just as inalienable, it seems, is the right to boo at a baseball park.

It's come to be an Americanism and a healthy sort of one at that. At least as long as the boo is heard we know there is still such an item as minority rights. It's not a case of "Sig Hell" or get your block knocked off by a storm trooper. As long as we may boo with perfect freedom, democracy is still in pretty good shape.

POVICH

This department has a kind word for the boo, but we don't include the hiss. The boo always struck us as a hearty disapproval of the booee, an innocent sort of way of letting folks know that they are not exactly provoking a great amount of delight. But the hiss—that has nasty implications, smacking of something snake-like lurking in the background and quite becoming, perhaps to Communists in a newsreel theater.

In late years the booing at Griffith Stadium has been amazingly intensified. The fact is, Washington fans were late to catch on. In New York, in Cleveland—particularly Cleveland—in Chicago and St. Louis, the boo for many seasons has been standard equipment of baseball fans. Here, a few years ago, the fan who booed sounded sort of silly, perhaps, because he was booing alone. But the idea has caught on all right and in Washington we now do very well with our booing.

An Unpardonable Demonstration of Booing

We judge that it wasn't until 1926 that booing was a part of the Griffith Stadium picture. Perhaps it was because Washington fans were unspoiled. They had never had a pennant-winning team until 1924, had never anticipated one. But with the taste of pennants in '24 and '25 still on their palates, they wanted more. They expected better baseball from the Nats and when the Nats didn't continue to win pennants, very naturally folks gravitated to the boo.

What we are getting around to is the completely unpardonable demonstration of too great a number of Griffith Stadium fans last Sunday when they turned loose their boos on Shortstop Cecil Travis. That wasn't a fair sort of boo. The folks who booed Travis that day are the sort who would slap their grandmother for misplacing her glasses.

Travis' immediate crime of last Sunday was missing a pop fly that he had no right to catch. The fact that he lost it in the sun—such things do happen—was not taken into account by the wolves who unloaded against Travis. The fellow hasn't been hitting, of course, and for that reason the grandstand yelpers may have stored up animus toward him.

But anent Travis' hitting, we can always quote the late Charley Comiskey, who owned the White Sox. For nearly a week, White Sox games had been rained out by a steady drizzle. Team officials were in a panic and one of them was talking to the Old Roman.

"Do you think it will ever stop raining, Mr. Comiskey?" he asked.

"Well," said Comiskey calmly, "it always has."

Travis Is Last Player Fans Should 'Razz'

Well, Cecil Travis always has been a swell hitter. He can show a lifetime average of .320. Managers and players around the league will tell you the fellow is one of the really fine hitters of baseball. That he won't continue to hit is unthinkable. They don't discover weaknesses in a guy who has been up there hitting as high as .335 for nearly a half-dozen years. Last season, it seems, he was the fifth leading batter in the American League.

But the Travis they were booing out there Sunday was not a 100 per cent Travis. They were, in fact, booing a sick man. The 25-year-old fellow who made good as a big leaguer before he was 20, never has completely recovered from his grippe attack in the South. He's leg-heavy and slow, but even under those handicaps Bucky Harris thinks he's good enough to be in there every day, and Travis has never asked to be relieved.

They were booing a courageous guy, too. They were booing a fellow who, little more than two weeks ago at Chicago, was playing ball despite a high fever of 103. He had made two singles and a triple, and after scoring a run, he returned to the dougout in a heavy pant.

"I'm sick as blazes," he told Sammy West in the late innings. "I don't know if I can make it for the rest of the game."

But he didn't tell Bucky Harris that, and two innings later Travis went out there and belted a home run with a man on base to put Washington in the lead. That night he went under the doctor's care for a week at the Nats' Chicago hotel.

That's the guy they booed Sunday for missing a pop fly he wasn't supposed to catch. To the guys who did boo—boo!

Poland Evens Series With Germany, 2-2

Wins First Singles Match, Darkness Postpones Second

By the Associated Press.

Warsaw, May 22.—Poland evened the score against Germany at 2-2 in their second-round European Zone Davis Cup series today by winning one singles match, but the deciding encounter was left unfinished because of darkness. It will be completed tomorrow.

Ignacy Tlocynski, of Poland, conquered by Roderich Menzel, former Czechoslovakian player, 2—6, 6—1, 5—7, 6—2, 9—7, to bring the Polish team up on even terms with the favored Germans.

Then in the final match, Henner Henkel, of Germany, won the first two sets from Adam Baworowski, 6—4, 6—2, before darkness halted play.

Belgium Defeats Norway at Net

Brussels, May 22 (AP).—Belgium qualified to meet Norway in the third round of the European zone in the Davis Cup competition today when A. Lacroix won the fifth and deciding match from India.

After Ghaus Mohammed had beaten Charles Naeyaert, 10—8, 6—2, 6—1, to square the series Lacroix came through with a 6—2, 6—2, 6—4 decision over Y. Savoor.

Lad Who Caused Griffith to Faint Offered Contract

A college first baseman whose fielding lapse was responsible for a thrown ball felling Clark Griffith at Griffith Stadium Saturday was offered a contract by Mr. Griffith yesterday.

John D. (Jack) Sanford, for three years a star first baseman for the University of Richmond, profoundly impressed the owner of the Nationals despite the fact that it was his failure to catch a ball thrown by Charley Gelbert which struck Griffith, who was standing nearby, and caused a brief fainting spell.

Following his recovery Griffith talked terms with young Sanford and offered him a substantial bonus to sign a Washington contract.

Sanford batted .420 this season and .458 last season when he led the Southern Conference in hitting.

Reds Beat Dodgers, 6-3, For Seventh in Row

By the Associated Press.

Cincinnati, May 22.—The rampant Reds hit "in the clutches" today and won their seventh straight game by a 6-to-3 margin over the Brooklyn Dodgers.

Lefty Lee Grissom blanked the Brooklyns for six innings, but weakened in the ninth and Gene Thompson finished up after the Dodgers had scored two runs in the closing frame. It was Grissom's third win of the season.

Luke Hamlin, who started for the dodgers, suffered his third straight setback before he gave way to Russ Evans in the eighth.

Although the Reds made only eight hits, just as many as the Dodgers, their blows were far more timely. Two hits, one of them Ernie Lombardi's single, accounted for two runs in the first inning. Lonnie Frey whacked his third homer of the year in the sixth. In the seventh, a walk for Harry Craft was followed by Lee Gamble's two-bagger, which made it easy for Craft to score on the following infield out.

Rain Halts Game As Yanks Trail

New York, May 22 (AP).—Rain washed out the game between the Cleveland Indians and New York Yankees after 4½ innings were played today. The Tribe was leading, 3 to 1, at the time, Charley Keller having hit a homer for the Yanks' only run as the first man up in the fifth inning. Since the Yanks had not completed their fifth inning turn at bat, the game was officially off and will be played later in the season.

Titlist Yates Leads Way in British Play

American Ends Slump, Uses $1 Putter in First-Round Victory

By the Associated Press.

Hoylake, England, May 22.—An old dollar putter and a little Georgia-like sunshine lifted defending Champion Charlie Yates into the second round of the British Amateur Golf championship today and finally broke a slump that threatened to send him back to Atlanta post haste.

The champion had fog in his bones for a week. Bundled to the eyebrows on the course during practice and huddled before a miserable little fire in his hotel the rest of the time, he had not been the boy who rushed through the field at Troon last year and endeared himself to British golf fans.

But today a warm sun limbered him up and on the fifth green the old dollar putter did the rest. As the result he polished off Bruce Thompson, local blond bond salesman, 5 and 4.

Dick Chapman, Greenwich, Conn., socialite, and only other of the five Americans entered to see action today, joined the titleholder in the second round with a display of fine golf that turned back John Cowley, of Rotherham, 4 and 3.

For five holes Yates scrambled. He hit a spoon shot into the sand trap at the first, but managed to win the hole when Thompson took a six. He hit his drive into the sand at the second and flubbed his approach. Though he got away with that, he lost his hole lead at the third when again his drive went into the sand and again he muffed his approach.

All that and another poor chip to the fifth left him with a 15-foot putt to keep from going one down and it was here that the old dollar putter helped the champion out. Charlie looked that 15-footer over for an uncommonly long time, and then tapped it across the keen green carpet. It ran straight to center of the cup, wavered on the lip and then disappeared.

Two holes later another 18-footer vanished for a deuce and then "Happy Charlie" began to jowe with the gallery again. One up at the turn, he hit a screaming full brassie into the heart of the tenth green, did the same thing at the twelfth and then, fully confident at last, took the next two for the match.

"That sunshine was wonderful," said Charlie. "I feel better now."

Yates has a tough match tomorrow against burly Donald Cameron, wealthy Scottish internationalist who hits the ball a mile and is capable of great golf. Chapman's second-round opponent will be M. W. Budd, of whom little is known.

Thomson, Hagen Two Strokes Above Limit At Philadelphia; Montague Picks Up

Otto Greiner Wins One of Seven Places At Congressional; Snead Has Great 65

The scene of the National Open Championship, Philadelphia, was the scene of the major casualties of the sectional qualifying rounds yesterday as Walter Hagen, the two-time champion, and Slugger Jimmy Thomson were two strokes above the limit and will be missing from the big show.

Joe Kirkwood and Leo Diegel were also among the failures at Philadelphia, while in Chicago Mystery Man John Montague, no longer a mystery, picked up after failing to break 80 in either round. Chick Evans also finished above the limit there, as did his playing partner, Jock Hutchinson.

Other "name" players who will be missing June 8, 9 and 10, include four of the Turnesa brothers, Fred Haas, Scotty Campbell, Fay Coleman, Eddie Held, Al Watrous and other prominent players.

Best score of the 32 qualifying spots—the Birmingham play was rained out—was Tommy Wright's 132 total over the East Lake Course, in Atlanta. Clayton Heafner was 137 in his home town, Charlotte, N. C., while in Washington Sammy Snead had an afternoon 65 to be third lowest scorer in the Nation with 139 over the Congressional course.

Highest total to make the grade was a 157, good for one of two places at New Orleans.

Montague Fails

Chicago, May 22.—John Montague, Hollywood's mystery man of golf, picked up his ball on the final green, failing to qualify for the National Open golf tournament at the Chicago district trials today.

Montague's failure was easily the high point of the day's program, which found three well-known professionals and nine comparative newcomers getting the nod for the finals at Philadelphia.

Hopelessly out of it along toward dusk, Montague grinned, and picked up his ball on the last hole.

"I've had a real lesson in golf over two magnificent courses," he said. "The spectators were very kind and I hope to be back next year."

His scores were 36-45—81 in the morning and 39 and he was headed for another count in the 40s when he quit.

(Score on Page 18.)

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

After a morning 74 left him on the verge of nonqualification, Slammin' Sammy Snead got right back on his stick yesterday afternoon, romped around the Congressional course with a record-breaking 65, seven under par, and led the Middle Atlantic Sector's National Open Qualifiers with a 36-hole total of 139.

The 65 was two strokes lower than the previous mark of 67, and was composed of 11 pars and seven birdies. It was one of the greatest rounds of golf ever shot on a District course, under pressure, for if Snead had failed to qualify for the Open this year he would have lost thousands of dollars and much of his standing.

Walper Has 141

In all the field of 48—37 pros and 11 amateurs—set a new low-scoring mark for any previous major tournament qualifications, as it took one over par score for the 36 holes to gain one of the seven places to the Philadelphia tourney, June 8, 9, 10.

Trailing Snead's great score by two shots by Leo Walper, with a 69 and 72, for 141, two under par. The Middle Atlantic P. G. A. champion was one of five DiDstrict golfers who made the grade. The others were Wiffy Cox, host pro, with 144; Al Houghton, Snead's playing partner, with 142; Frank Cunningham, Burning Tree mentor, and Bobby Brownell, Manor amateur, each with 145.

Baltimore's big delegation was held to one place, gained by Otto Greiner, the State champion, while the small Virginia entry was shut out. Snead played here as a transfer, as he did not have time to get back to his home spot, Huntington, W. Va., after Sunday's match.

After playing here Saturday and Sunday in a total of 11 under par, Snead was expected to tear the course to pieces, but in his morning round he just couldn't get going, and after turning in 36, one under, he missed the green on 11, 15 and 16 on the back nine and was over par on each. To top it off, he parked his tee shot in the middle of the final green, a par four, and 3-putted.

Sammy termed it "one of the worst rounds of golf I've played in many a day; nothing was right and I couldn't hit the ball the way I wanted to.

But in the afternoon, with the gallery whispering, "Looks like he won't get in," the West Virginian replied with a beautiful round. He was a little shaky at the start, scrambling to pars on the second and third holes, but he birdied the fifth, a par five, dropped a 6-footer on the sixth for a birdie and easily birdied the eighth.

He played a great second shot on the eleventh, to go four under par by dropping a short putt, and parred through the sixteenth. On the last two holes he dropped putts of 10 and 3 feet for birdies, his tee shot on the last hole falling short of the green on a bad kick.

Hitting Long Ball

He was hitting the ball a country mile off the tee, and where his shots were missing the green in the morning, he was knocking them right beside the pin in the afternoon, as he scored nine strokes lower.

Walper hit a birdie streak in his morning round, four out of six from the eighth through the fourteenth, and on the last hole had a 3 for a 68 and 6-stroke edge over Snead. But his 3-foot birdie putt slid to the right of the cup for a 69. He was out in 35, 2 under, in the afternoon, despite starting with a 6, but poor second shots on the tenth and fifteenth holes cost a stroke to par each, and he was back in 37 for the 72, and 141 total.

Houghton, playing with Snead, turned in the most consistent golf of the day, hitting nearly every green in regulation strokes. The fourth hole cost him a pair of shots to par, while he birdied the fifth and eighteenth both rounds. He had only one bad hole, the ninth of the afternoon, where he trapped his tee shot and failed to get out, going 2 over with a 5.

Cox played streaky golf in the morning for a 70, 2 under. He 3-putted five greens, including the eighteenth, which he drove, and

San Francisco Qualifiers Play For the Fun of It

San Francisco, May 22 (AP).—It was a good tournament, but the qualifying trials here for the United States Open golf championship didn't mean a thing today.

After shooting 74, 70—144 on the San Francisco Country Club course to win the event, Earl Fry, Alameda pro, decided he didn't want to go to Philadelphia. Pat Markovich, of Carquinez, who hit every green except the tenth in par to get the second berth with 145, agreed with Fry that Philadelphia was too far away.

Art Doering, of Stanford University, one of the two amateurs who competed against the 11 pros, was offered and accepted the berth on the basis of his third-place showing of 73, 73—146. Fourth-place Ben Coltrin and fifth spot Vito Machado agreed they didn't want the second berth. Cam Puget, Monterey pro, who shot 76, 77—153 to trail Harold Sampson in seventh place, declared he didn't deserve it, but would like to make the trip.

Their Majesties See Eightieth Running of Traditional King's Plate

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Shattering another precedent, the King and Queen are shown here in the state coach that took them to the royal box at Woodbine Park yesterday in Toronto to watch the famed Canadian horse race, the King's Plate, inaugurated by Queen Victoria. After the race, the King in accordance with tradition, presented 50 guineas—in person, however—to C. George McCullagh, owner of the winner, Archworth. Fifty thousand saw the race, a new Canadian record

King and Queen Watch Archworth Win at Woodbine

Toronto, May 22 (AP).—C. George McCullagh's Archworth won the eightieth running of the King's Plate at Woodbine track today while the King and Queen looked on.

A cheering crowd of 40,000 saw Their Majesties arrive at the track a few minutes before the 13 runners left the paddock. King George, first monarch to witness a running of the event inaugurated by Queen Victoria, presented 50 guineas to the winning owner and personally congratulated him and Jockey S. Birley.

The triumph of Archworth, a 2-to-1 favorite, was highly popular. Sea General, owned by Harry Giddings, placed second, a full ten lengths back of the flying winner

Four Seeded Girls Escape Pitfalls

Byes, Defaults Aid Misses Lee, O'Steen And Ellis and Mrs. Belin to Advance

Major upsets were missing yesterday as the four seeded players, aided by byes and defaults, breezed through the first two rounds and into the quarterfinals of the annual City of Washington tennis tournament at Army Navy Country Club.

Mary Cootes Belin, Willie O'Steen, Ann Ellis and Margo Lee, seeded in that order, had no trouble whatsoever in justifying their ratings and barring surprises of miraculous proportions will decide the title among them.

None of the quartet played more than one match yesterday, for Mrs. Belin won her first-round match by default over Eunice Wilson, Miss O'Steen and Miss Ellis drew byes and Miss Lee benefited by a second-round default.

In her first match Miss Lee, considered by observers to have an excellent chance of crashing through to the championship in her second year of local campaigning, polished off Barbara Conrad in straight sets and with the loss of only two games, 6—1, 6—1.

In the second round Miss O'Steen, tall, bespectacled former playground champion, had momentary trouble with Frances Carter, who forced her to 14 games in the first set before bowing out, 8—6, 6—1; Mrs. Belin showed excellent form in defeating Sallie Whipple, conqueror of Kay Baker, 6—1, 6—3, and Miss Ellis romped over Marian Pritchard, 6—0, 6—3.

Quarterfinal matches today pit Mrs. Belin and the troublesome Edith McCullough, who beat Joan Branford, 6—1, 6—0, after drawing a bye to reach the second round; Miss Ellis and Mrs. Edna Vest, who has not yet played because of a bye and a default, while Miss O'Steen tackles the veteran and still clever Mrs. Dorette Miller and Miss Lee encounters Johanna Zetlemeier. The semifinal maches will be played Thursday, because some of the entrants will be out of town tomorrow and it is hoped that the finals can be staged Friday.

Macks' Streak Halted at Four; Browns Victors

Philadelphia, May 22.—The Athletics' four-game winning streak was cracked today by the home-run bats of Mel Mazzera and Harland Clift which gave the St. Louis Browns a 6-to-3 victory.

Mazzera's clout over the right-field wall in the fourth inning shattered a 2-to-2 tie. With two down in the fifth and one on, Clift, for the second time in as many days, blasted a roundtripper into the left-field stands to score the winning runs.

Pedaling Georgian Pauses, En Route to South America

Modern Marco Polo Looks in at 'Bucephalus,' A Bike Which Carried Him 25,000 Miles

By Al Hailey.

A 27-year-old scholar and former Southern Conference boxing champion, who pedaled his way around the world, passed through Washington yesterday on his way to South America—by way of Canada, the great Northwest and San Francisco.

He paused here yestedray to look in on an old friend—"Bucephalus," his trusty bike which once saved him from the bite of a king cobra and which now rests in Smitsonian Institution between Lindbergh's Spirit of St. Louis and Commander Byrd's Floyd Bennett North Pole plane.

Hailing from the deep South, the modern Marco Polo's name is Fred A. Birchmore, of Athens, Ga. He is pedaling his way at present toward New York's World's Fair to have a part in the Georgia State exhibit.

The only white man to go into the wild tribal country of central Afghanistan and come out alive, Birchmore rode "Bucephalus" 25,000 miles in 43 different countries.

His Right Saves Him

As a student at the University of Georgia—from which he graduated three times—Birchmore was bantamweight champion of the Southern Conference in 1930 and champion again in 1933 of the newly formed Southeastern Conference.

Birchmore's timely punch was landed on the jaw of a Persian tramp who leaped upon him from the roadside, seized him by the collar and held a dagger to his throat.

"He was standing there with his jaw in the clear, so I did the natural thing," Birchmore said. "When I hit him he went down—probably more in surprise than anything else. I did not wait to ask him if he was surprised, however."

Poisons Big Cat

Followed by a tiger in the Federated Shan states for two days, Birchmore finally lured the big cat into eating a poisoned calf carcas. He brought home the tiger skin.

In upper Burma, Birchmore was chased by a king cobra for several feet. The cobra easily overtook the speeding bicycle and struck at the panting rider. The snake missed, however, and was beheaded when his hooded head flow between the spokes of the wheel.

"I don't know how long I rode after that before stopping. I was so thankful for that escape," Birchmore said.

Birchmore has written a book entitled "Around the World on a Bicycle," and the National Geographic Magazine has reserved rights on his accounts of adventures in central Afghanistan, where he took several pictures—a main part of the 5,000 photographs he snapped on his globe circling jaunt.

Had No Weapons

He took no weapons with him on the trip—which he made at an expense of about $200.

"I figured there were more good people in the world than bad and I think I must have been right," he drawled.

Birchmore's tour began in the summer of 1935 when he was an international exchange student to the Cologne University in Germany. He pedaled over the northern countries of Europe—making a lone trip up the Matterhorn and almost losing his life in a seven-hour slide down, and then made his way down to Egypt. He had to carry "Bucephalus" several miles through treacherous swamps in China.

Now he's planning to tour the uncharted sections of South America.

"I hear there are a few places down there where no white fellow has ever been," he said. "Maybe I'll have to do some more boxing."

When not on a bicycle, Birchmore is a practicing attorney in his home town. He holds A. B., LL.B. and M. A. degrees from the University of Georgia and has all requirements with exception of his doctor's thesis for his Ph. D.

banged in six birdies. Out in 37 with a bogey, birdie and seven pars in the afternoon, he was over on ten with a short second, and eleven with a hooked drive, but finished in par to match it for the day.

Cunningham, overlooked in pretourney talk, was bunched at 74 with several others in the morning but made no mistakes in his second round, parring 17 holes and dropping a 6-foot birdie putt on the fifth. On his first round he was over on five holes and regained three strokes with birdies. On the eighteenth hole his ball got a bad kick that resulted in a 5 instead of 3.

Bobby Brownell, in his first local tournament appearance, was 73 on his first round, with a two-over par 5 on the twelfth marring his card. He hit a subpar streak in the last round, dropping a 20-footer for an eagle on the eighth, a 50-fot birdie putt on the eleventh and nearly holing his tee shot for an ace on the twelfth. The Duke sophomore lost three strokes the rest of the way in, however, two on the par 3 twelfth, where he was trapped in one and over in two.

Greiner, sharing the first round lead with Walper, was never over par with his 69, and birdied three holes, all the par fives but the first. But in the afternoon his putting touch deserting him he was over on four holes and failed to drop a birdie. The 19-year-old Baltimore U. second-year student had 29 pars.

Andy Gibson, who won the Maryland Open crown over the same course last year, was one shot out of the money with 146. After a par 72, he hit several bad holes in the afternoon and was back in 76. He failed to get a par from the eighth to the twelfth. That cost him a place.

The most surprising incident among the nonqualifiers was the failure of the Chevy Chase trio, Bob Barnett and the Worsham brothers. Barnett and Lewis Worsham led the field last year.

Gene Larkin, Woodmont pro, and Cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam mentor, tied for second alternate with 148s, four over par and what Sunday looked like a sure place.

Johnny Hawkins Dies After Short Illness

Los Angeles, May 22 (INS).—Johnny Hawkins, former football star of national prominence and one-time captain of the University of Southern California football team, died today in Santa Monica Hospital after a short illness.

He was stricken with severe pains in the head last Friday and friends at M-G-M studio, where he was working, said his death may have been due to an old head injury. He was 35 years old.

'Krakky' Still Nat Ace—Harris

'Shameful the Way Club Supports Him,' Says Manager

"Losing pitcher—Krakauskas."

That line has been appended to American League box scores six times this season and Joe Krakauskas, of the Nats, has lost more ball games than any other pitcher in the American League.

But he's still the No. 1 pitcher on the Washington staff, and the suspicion is that the New York Yankees are in a mood to renew the $50,000 offer they made for the big left-hander last winter.

Because Krakauskas, despite his one victory and six defeats, is blossoming as one of the rising young stars of American League pitching mounds and if he pitches no better ball than he has displayed thus far this season, he'll continue to get a regular starting assignment from Bucky Harris.

Krakauskas' pitching has been capable enough to reverse his record. Given the proper support in the field and only a modicum of support at bat he would now be boasting six victories instead of six losses. In only one game have the Nats scored more than three runs for him. And in only two games have they scored as many as three.

The appearance of Krakauskas in the box has been the sign for the Nats to offer up their feeblest hitting. He had to hold the Yankees to one run to lick 'em, and in his last two starts against the White Sox he was beaten 2-1 and 3-2, the latter game going ten innings.

JOE KRAKAUSKAS

'Should Be Among League Leaders;' Yanks Like Him

"With any sort of hitting behind him, Krakky would be up there among the league's leading pitchers," said Bucky Harris yesterday. "In seven starts, he has been wild only twice. He's shortened his wind-up and he's getting results. It's shameful the way the club has been treating him.

"Krakky's the kind of a pitcher any manager would like to have. He's big and tough and he always wants to pitch. He's strong enough to bear down all the way, and Bob Feller's the only fellow who can pour it in faster than Krakky. I don't care how many games we boot away for him, he'll take a regular turn."

Joe Haynes, whose second big league start was delayed yesterday by the rain that washed out the scheduled game with the White Sox, will return to the mound against the Sox today, benefited by the additional day's rest. He will oppose Jack Knott, former Brownie.

Zeke Bonura Is Benched, Giants Win

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, May 22.—The New York Giants, using a sharply revamped line-up, rallied behind Prince Hal Schumacher's best pitching of the year today to trample the pirates, 9 to 2, and end their two-game losing jam.

Disappointed at the Giants' recent record of winning only four games in 12 starts before today, Bill Terry benched Catcher Harry Danning, in favor of Ken O'Dea, and put Johnny McCarthy on first base in place of Zeke Bonura, in order to get more "hustle" out of the team.

Schumacher went the route for the first time in six starts, allowing only six hits, four of them by "Jeep" Handley. The Giants belted three hurlers for 12 hits.

Guldahl Hits Nail On Head

Ralph Guldahl, two-time National Open champion, hit the nail on the head as far as the scores were concerned in yesterday's open tests at Congressional.

After playing the course Sunday in 69, Guldahl was in a conversation about the following day's trials, and despite the fact the other estimates were 148 and 150, Guldahl said "a score of 146 should not get in over this course," they all should be within a stroke of par or better.

The 146 did not get in, and the scores were within a stroke of par, or better.

R. Cliff McKimmie, former amateur and pro star here, playing his first full round in four years, with borrowed sticks, had 82-78, 160 . . . Fred McLeod, the 1908 Open champion, played the first nine in 40, 3 over par, with a 5 on a par 3 hole . . . George Diffenbaugh and Al Jamison had a lot of putting trouble . . . Page Hufty played 16 holes in 2 under par in the afternoon, finishing 6-5-4 for a 73 . . . Bob Morris, public links player, had an eagle 3 on the par 5 eighth and a 7 on the par 3 ninth, in succession . . . Ralph Beach retired at the end of 18, his sprained wrist giving him trouble, with 77 . . . Walter Cunningham, out of competition for nearly a year, had a 73 and 38 before he lost his chances on the back nine . . . When rain postponed the ball game, Buddy Myer, Sammy West and Clyde Milan turned golf spectators . . . Snead left Congressional on a night train for New York, where he will play in the Metropolitan Open . . . He doesn't plan to go to Philadelphia in time for more than two practice rounds for the Open, while Guldahl will spend three weeks at the course . . . Fette Routed, But Bees Beat Bruins, 5 to 3

Chicago, May 22.—Neither Lou Fette nor Bill Lee, the starting pitchers, finished the game as the Boston Bees, winning 5 to 3, managed today to even the series with the Chicago Cubs at one apiece.

Fette was taken out after allowing six hits in five innings and Leif Errickson finished the game, allowing only three more Cub hits. Lee was taken out for a pinch hitter in the eighth after he had given up nine hits.

Buddy Hassett paced the Bee attack with two singles and a double. He scored one run and drove in two others.

Cardinals Beat Philadelphia Behind Rookie

Cooper Holds Phillies To 4 Hits in 2-1 Victory; Retain League Lead

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, May 22. — Morton Cooper, young St. Louis Cardinal righthander, held the Philadelphia Phillies to four hits, three of them doubles by Hershel Martin, to turn in a 2-to-1 victory today and maintain the Redbirds' slim lead over Cincinnati in the National League race.

Except for the Philadelphia centerfielder's extra-base blows, only Al Hollingsworth, Doc Prothro's hurler, was able to hit Cooper.

Cooper, however, got in hot water in the ninth inning, walking Legrant Scott and allowing H. Martin his third double to start off the inning. Manager Ray Blades then called on Curt Davis to finish, and he retired the next three men in order. Scott scored when Morris Arnovich was thrown out at first.

Hollingsworth allowed but five hits, including doubles by Jimmy Brown and Joe Medwick.

Baering Down

By Arthur "Bugs" Baer.

The Republicans are staging a national debt week with the Democrats as guest artists.

The G. O. P. slogan for the 1940 Presidential campaign will be, "Vote for a Republican and black ink." We haven't seen either one for eight years.

The surprise element is important in politics. That's why the Republicans will feature a balanced budget, prosperity, work and a complete line of novelties.

5,000 Youngsters to Compete in Prince Georges Track Meet

Willis Climbs Off Floor to Defeat Chivas; Brookman Loses; Lind Wins

Mamakos was given a big ovation, but it didn't match that given a visiting celebrity—Monte Stratton, Chicago White Sox pitcher, who lost his leg as the result of a hunting accident and had to give up a promising career. Stratton was introduced by Col. Jimmy Lake and stood up to take a bow from his ringside seat.

The local Greek boy, rated sixth among the welterweights by the National Boxing Association, was never in danger. He took Zanelli s Sunday punches and then came back for Monday's and Tuesday's.

He got them all but managed to get in about 15 or 20 for each day of the week to various parts of Zanelli's person and won every round, according to The Post score sheet.

Boys Quit Dance

After getting acquainted in the first-round waltz, Rough House Ralphie and Steve went to work, Zanelli making Mamakos look silly in the first three rounds by weaving out of the way of the local boy's offerings. Zanelli was warned for hitting a low blow in the third after opening a cut on Mamakos' forehead.

Steve took a series of hard rights to the head in the sixth and backed away once. He returned to turn Zanelli's face into a ruddy red color and worked constantly on Zanelli with a left to the midsection followed by an uppercut, which, while it did not possess knockout power, did plenty of damage to Zanelli's face.

Zanelli shot a hard right and raised a mouse on Steve's cheek in the ninth, and Steve got mad. Zanelli was staggered under a deluge, and both boys ignored the bell ending the ninth, each displaying a bit of anger. The tenth is hardly worth mentioning. Mamakos' title hopes appeared a bit more hazy as the bell ended the fight.

The rains which came in the afternoon had their effect on the crowd. Promoter Joe Turner's paying guests numbered 1,927. They paid $2,528.91, far below the hopes and expectations of Turner and Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn.

Wills Gets Nod

Metuchen, N. J., May 22 (AP).—Frank F. Dole, dog show judge for 55 years, died today after a two-year illness. Eighty years old, Dole has conducted a column on dogs in the New York Herald Tribune for nearly 30 years and before that had been a prominent athlete. One of his favorite anecdotes was that he had taught President Taft how to wrestle.

Best of Breed

New York, May 22.—He was a big fellow with a booming voice and a lusty laugh. He was here in the office when the first of us arrived, and even then we recognized him as the absolute authority in his sphere of sports. He had no equals and no challengers. Where dogs were concerned Frank Dole knew it all. He bred them, he raised them, he showed them and he judged them. He had been writing about them since most of us first learned to read.

VIDMER

But his interest in sports was not confined to the one he covered with such authority. Around the office he talked about the Yankees and their power, and sometimes lapsed into enchanting memories of Hoss Radbourne, King Kelley, Wee Willie Keeler and others of the old-timers whose names were only legends to most of us.

He followed football zealously and knew as much about the Eastern teams as those whose job it was to cover them as experts, and often he would recall incidents connected with the days when football players wore long hair and shin guards and nose guards, and his eyes would brighten as he spoke of Hefflefinger and Hinkey, the Poes of Princeton and other immortals of the East.

A Dozen Colleges

He followed every sport, even as he neared the age of 80, with all the keen enthusiasm that he had followed sports all his life. And he had been intimately connected with most of them.

His father was one of the first men to teach physical culture in this country. He himself had been trainer of the track team at Bowdoin, instructor in boxing at Andover, Exeter, Amherst and Williams; assistant to his father as trainer of the football and track teams at Yale, coach of football at Pennsylvania, Wesleyan and trainer at Princeton. He was, at one time or another, in some athletic capacity, connected with a dozen colleges and universities along the Eastern front.

But his real love was for his dogs. Once when he was at New Haven he had a bull terrier called Brandy, and he entered the pup in the first dog show ever held in that city. The judge looked over the entries, made a wry face at what he saw on exhibition, and finally gave his decision.

That was the beginning of Frank Dole's association with the dog world, for the red one was Brandy. But as the years went on he became closer and closer to the canine kingdom and long before most of us even knew him he was recognized as the greatest authority on dogs in the country.

We all accepted him as such, took his judgment and authority for granted and seldom even paused to marvel at the great ruggedness that permitted him to follow the pointers and setters through rain-drenched meadows at field trials and come in with his feet soaking wet and sit down and write learnedly and expertly of what he had seen. We hardly realized that he was getting along in years—this man with the massive shoulders, the clear, honest eyes and the hearty laughter.

Yet the years were moving along and Frank Dole was 77, 78, 79, almost 80.

Now he is gone—gone perhaps to those green fields he loved so well, where faultless hunting dogs come to picture points at every turn, and a covey of birds rises against the unbroken blue. Somehow, we can't think of him as dead. Sometimes it seems more as though, after all these full, mellow years rich with memories, the Greatest Judge of All has chosen Frank from all the other human entries as the best of breed.

Riders Seeking First Ball Title In 20 Seasons

Twenty years of famine, as far as interhigh baseball championships are concerned, will be spurring on Roosevelt's series nine today when it makes the first of two starts this week with a title chance at stake. Woodrow Wilson is the invader.

The second game in the West section of the series brings together Central and Western, a brace of teams which still have glowing prospects of toppling Roosevelt from its present lead. Western is the host, and both halves of the doubleheader start at 3:30.

The battles mark the start of the last week of regular play. A game today and one Friday end matters until the city crown game next Wednesday, unless a playoff is needed, and then Roosevelt might as well kiss its prospective city title a loving good-by. The Riders have been notably unlucky at playoffs; witness their complete collapse earlier in the year in the basketball series.

FBI Again Jinxs G. W. Frosh Star

The next time a George Washington athletic team plays Federal Bureau of Invsetigation the chances are Bobby Gilham will remain on the bench voluntarily, for the youthful Colonial star is laid up for the second time within a year with a broken foot bone and each time he received the injury in competition against the G-Men.

Crossing first base in a game against FBI Saturday Gilham turned his foot on the bag and was removed from the game when he complained of the pain. X-rays taken yesterday revealed that he had suffered a break in the same foot which he fractured in a basketball game between the G. W. frosh and G-Men last winter.

Roosevelt Golfers Beat G.W. High

Roosevelt High golfers, Dawes Cup interhigh champions, defeated George Washington High, 5-1, yesterday in a practice match for Friday's battle with Bethesda for the Metropolitan championship.

Franklin, No. 1 player of the Presidents, defeated Gruver, Roosevelt captain, for the losers lone point. Waggan beat Bettis and Roosevelt won the best ball in the top foursome, 5 and 4. The points in the next foursome were all Roosevelt, Patterson over Maddon, 2 and 1, and Powers over Sampson, 2 up and the best ball, 3 and 2.

Hoya-G. W. Game Off

The game scheduled yesterday between the Georgetown and George Washington freshmen, last of the season for both teams, was canceled by rain and examinations make it impossible to play it at a future date.

Pimlico Appeal Out

Addison Wins, 11 to 8

Addison Motor Co., softballers defeated the Indians, 11 to 8, yesterday in a Powell Community Center League game on the Johnson diamond. Paul Sapourn batted and pitched the Addisons to victory.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

Cincinnati, May 22.—If the Cincinnati Reds don't win the 1939 National League Pennant Judge Landis should investigate them, and take steps to reduce the social classification and admission prices of what I ingeniously have nicknamed "the Senior Circuit."

CONSIDINE

The Reds are the hope and salvation of the National League. They have gone out and developed their own ball players. They have bred talent, rather than purchased it ready made. They have yanked themselves from the dregs of their circuit—and there can be no deeper hole—to become a brisk, entertaining, powerful club that reverses the tradition of most big league teams and plays baseball as if the enterprise were a pleasure. They are the first truly big-leaguish National League club since the 1934 Cardinals.

If they lose that flapping flannel to a team like the Cubs or Bees or even the Giants—all of whose elderly ranks are seasoned with a lot of spavined old bums from the American League—the National League might just as well strike up an acquaintance with a good embalmer. For if the Reds, bristling with what might be called the flower of National League youth, can't beat the rheumy pensioners from the other league, what's the use? And what right has the loop got to charge a buck-ten for a four-bit show?

The Reds Are Playing Big-League Baseball

It has become popular, among the National League's apologists, to sneer at power and profess great love for what is called the National League type of baseball, to wit: defensive skill, base-running and all the seemlier sides of baseball activity. The Reds, we think, are going to end all that. The reason such a screwy idea circulated in the first place is that for nearly a decade the National hasn't had enough good sluggers to fill a phone booth. The Reds are making a lot of fans re-realize that fancy boxing is all right in its place, but nothing beats a good belt to the whiskers.

The Reds don't play National League ball. They play big-league ball. They're complete. They do all the things a team should do—and do it with a verve that is alarmingly amateur in spirit—and when they need runs they go out there and bang 'em home. They don't pray them in, or wish them across, or squeeze them by disguised in a clean shirt. As of Sunday they were a heavier hitting club than the Yankees. They've hit 28 home runs in the past 27 games, and along with that their last six pitchers went the route to give them six straight games.

They've got some of the air of the Yankees about them, and it's an air that doesn't spring from vanity as much as confidence. Big Lombardi needed a home run to tie the score against Brooklyn on Sunday. He had just missed, by no more than a foot, one of the longest home runs anybody ever hit. So Freddie Fitzsimmons was taking pains not to throw him another inside ball. He kept the ball far to the outside of the plate, so Lombardi simply leaned over the dish and hit his homer into the rightfield stands.

Lombardy hardly stirred from the batter's box until the ball landed in the stands, so sure was he that it was going in.

Red Sox Appear Doomed by Yankee Domination

As this piece is being blasted into the Mount Rushmore of journalism the Reds are in second place, unable to get ahead of the Cardinals. They have been winning, but so have the Cards. However, the same spirit-cracking thing is not going to happen to them as seems bound to happen to the Boston Red Sox. The Sox are playing the greatest ball a Boston team has played in 25 years, but they are practically ready to be eliminated mathematically from the pennant race by the Yankees—who apparently only needed to rid themselves of Gehrig and DiMaggio to hit their stride. The Reds, on the other hand, are going to stick closer to the Cardinals than an Internal Revenue Bureau man to a sweep winner. And unless we're wrong, for one of the first times this week, the Reds will be far enough in front by July 4 to cartwheel in.

Their youth verve and indigenousness to the National League make the Reds the only old National team fit to associate with the Yankees in a World Series. Most of the other would-be representatives of the National League, in the 1939 series, have had their brains belted out at one time or another by Joe McCarthy's men, and they have no stomach for anything except the loser's checks. The Reds are a bunch of unintimidated young guys, tempered here and there with venerable wisdom and spoiling for a fight. If the old bums knock 'em out of the running, Ford Frick ought to add the House of David and George Sisler's Bloomer Girls to the loop and move headquarters to Atlantis.

Indian vs. Indian On Thursday's Mat Program

Indian will meet Indian Thursday night at Turner's Arena on the added attraction side of the match between the Golden Terror and Cliff Olson.

Jules Strongbow, 6-foot 6-inch Cherokee, will face Jim Clinstock, Colorado Ute, in the Indian mix-up. Strongbow, who forsook a promising career as a circus strong man to turn wrestler, made his last appearance here about four months ago against The Terror, while Clinstock has been appearing weekly at the W street arena.

Nanjo Singh, the Hindu "cobra death" man, will meet Dropkick Murphy in another bout on the supporting card.

Girls' 'Dark-Horse' TeamPlaysTonight

The Arlington Aces, billed as the 1939 'dark horse" girls' softball team, will play last year's Metropolitan champion national All-Star girls' team tonight at 8 o'clock in the Boys Republic Stadium, on Wilson Boulevard 1 mile beyond Clarendon, Va.

Tonight's game is said to be the test for the Aces' team. Starting an hour later, the Arlington Democrats will take over the diamond to play Arcade Laundry in a Metro League game.

The Democrats will be seeking to retain their undefeated status behind the pitching of Glen Leyde, who averaged 10 strikeouts per game in 29 contests last year. Sammy Hook will catch for the Democrats.

Burke to Captain G. U. Golf Team

John P. Burke, intercollegiate golf champion, was elected captain of the Georgetown University golf team for 1940, succeeding Billy Dettweiler.

Air Win Takes Charles Town Feature Purse by 2 Lengths

Pays $21.60 Price; Burner Takes Place

Royal Business Wins Show Money; Daily Double Pays Off at $137.80

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

Charles Town, W. Va., May 22.—E. A. Stone's Air Win, a 3-year-old son of Fair Wind, picked today's feature race, the Ohio River Purse, as the spot to run his best race of the year and forged home two lengths in front of a blanket finish for second money. The Thomas camera gave the place award to Mrs. M. Nelson Bond's Burner, with Capt. Evart Johnston's Royal Business placed third in the field of six.

With the Johnston entry of Royal Business and Dun Lucky played as if the race had already been run, Air Win provided a substantial $21.60 pay-off for the faithful. The colt ran the mile and a sixteenth in a creditable 1:47 4-5.

Jockey Beverly Hacker, who has not been performing in the style that made him a sensation here last year, rode a good race on Air Win. He took the colt to the front in the opening quarter, steadied him along while being challenged by Pradis and then put him to pressure to hold the opposition plenty safe at the end.

Another good figure was recorded in the daily double. The fortunate fans collected $137.80 for the usual deuce. Mrs. H. R. Jenkins' Justa Canter, making his first start of the season, turned back his rivals to pay $29.20. Ann Groucher and Game Chaser followed the winner to the wire. The photo had to separate the first two.

Horses to Watch At Charles Town

LULA KHAYYAM—Had trouble while running as a favorite. Will improve off that effort and should score.

CONSISTENT—Won very easily on Monday. Should repeat if not raised too far in class.

BANK NOTE—A 2-year-old that has never started, went 3-8 in 0:40 2-5 at Pimlico.

WORTHOWNING—Showed good effort to finish third in first start of year. Should account for a purse.

Bill Bennings

At The Post

Charles Town, W. Va., May 22.

Deal Al: Jockey Sammy Palumbo returned to action today after missing last Saturday's program, due to having two teeth extracted. There is no truth in the rumor that Washoe Valley, the start sprinter, is dead; she is on a farm near here and has gone blind. She will be used for breeding. The old mare Rockmin, which ran away with her rider at Pimlico, tossed Jockey Johnny Shanks several times on the way to the post today, but stood as meek as a lamb in the stall. She showed little speed when the field got away. I have had several inquiries about somebody taking a shot at me. As far as I know, it wasn't a rib. Joseph Crivello, of Washington, has shipped in Broken Rhythm, Chalotura and Onimod for racing here. Jockey W. Smith has arrived from Ohio and plans to ride out the meeting. Betting here for the first six days was well ahead of last year. The track dried out quickly today. When the entries went out this morning it was heavy and many horsemen scratched their horses in anticipation of bad going. R. F. Cook, the Washington trainer, is doing well around here. He has seven horses in his stable. "Dynamite" Kerr announced before today's third race that it was the final track appearance for Bally Bay, win, lose or draw. Kerr is sending the 9-year-old gelding into retirement and he will have nothing to do in the future but eat grass and sleep. No tickets were sold on the daily double combination of Justa Canter and Orkil's Russet. BILL.

First race.—Shanteb and Fair Deal are down at the bottom of the reserve list but will battle it out if they get into action. I'm taking no chances. Dixie S. appears best of those assured a place at the starting gate. Stand By has plenty of speed and left in those ancient legs and will be a keen factor. Pegadette's last was good.

Second race.—Adhelmar is dropping down to meet these and should do a lot of running. Flagetta was close up last out and is a threat. Lyde turned in a fast race on the milers and may be an upsetter in this field.

Third race.—Ace of Trumps, despite an assignment of 120 pounds, gets my call in this field. Which Blond is in light and has worked good and could be a threat. Flagabout to take care of the others.

Fourth race.—Lady Dunlin demonstrated fitness in her first outing and will be ready for some running in this field. Looks like the right spot. Boro Poker has plenty of speed and is dangerous. Lady Buck for the show award.

Fifth race.—Strumming ran a fine race last out and seems to fit nicely in this company. I see no reason for mistakes. Royal Cross should go well in this company. Ladys Favor is in with featherweight and is a threat.

Sixth race.—Roman Boy should win a lot of these short sprints. Needs only to break well. Accidental won her last in good style. Cats Cradle turned in a fine effort in that last and will be right there.

Seventh race—Counter Pass should win this. Gets in light and goes a route that suits. Huppy turned in a good race last out and is a threat. Westigal won her last and should be close up.

Eighth race.—Clymene came through with a nice second at the first asking and will like this route. War Rumor showed fair form last week. Prince Khayyam may improve with that last under his belt.

Sub race.—If this race is used I'll take Parking Ticket, Mr. Deeds and Game Chaser.

Best bet.—Lady Dunlin.

AnnualFt.Myer Show Carded This Week-End

Saturday and Sunday Event Will Benefit Army Relief Society

Fort Myer's annual outdoor horse show, which every spring attracts a long list of exhibitor- to the natural amphitheater opposite the entrance to Arlington National Cemetery, is scheduled for Saturday and Sunday as a benefit for the Army Relief Society.

Saturday's program includes classes for junior jumpers, handy jumpers, ladies' hunters, green polo ponies, open hunters and open jumpers. Sunday's events are for green jumpers, draft remount teams, enlisted men's open jumping, junior hunters, fault and out, road hacks, open polo ponies, working hunters and handicap jumpers.

This show is expected to bring out many of those who plan to exhibit June 2, 3 and 4 in the Washington Horse Show, for it offers them an excellent chance to school over a combination of show ring fences and natural obstacles which might be expected on the hunting field.

Practically every jump on the outside course is a permanent one, either stone, log, water of bank, topped off with movable rails so that the height may be changed.

Entries close Wednesday for the event. In case of bad weather, the scene will be shifted to the Fort Myer riding hall.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SEPLIN, $14.20, $5.40, $4.80; OSOFREE, $4.00, $3.60; NANCI'S BEST, $4.80.

SEPLIN, off alertly, came to the inside of OSOFREE to take command and drew out gradually. OSOFREE, first away, set a good pace and weakened in the final eighth. NANCI'S BEST, off poorly, worked her way to contention on the outside and closed full of run. POMPEY'S ROSE was well placed early and dropped back. DOCTOR'S NURSE had early speed. NOB'S BROTHER almost unseated his rider approaching the stretch and was taken up sharply.

SECOND RACE—About 4½ furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:06. Off at 3:10.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—JUSTA CANTER, $29.20, $14.80, $8.20; ANN GROUCHER, $18.20, $8.20; GAME CHASER, $5.20.

JUSTA CANTER, off poorly and sent around horses to improve his position approaching the stretch, wore down ANN GROUCHER under punishment in the final 50 yards. ANN GROUCHER, always a forward factor, disposed of BLUE PRELUDE and GOOD GRACIOUS to get to the front in the stretch and fought it out willingly. GAME CHASER was off poorly, raced on the inside throughout and showed a good effort. GOOD GRACIOUS was off poorly, was rushed to contention and quit under hard handling. BLUE PRELUDE had to be hard rushed to take a brief lead and stopped. HONEY MAID was through early.

THIRD RACE—Charles Town course. Purse $400; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 3:35. Off at 3:36½. Winner, L. H. Nimkoff's b. m. Two-dollar mutuels paid—CONSISTENT, $9.40, $6.20, $3.40; FREE RIDE, $6.80, $3.00; ROUGH BUDDY, $2.60.

CONSISTENT disposed of ROUGH BUDDY to get to the front and drew out to win with speed in reserve. FREE RIDE, hard ridden to reach contention, closed with good energy. ROUGH BUDDY, off alertly, was hard handled while trying to stave off CONSISTENT and tired. DILWIN raced wide throughout. BALLY BAY could not keep up.

Daily Double, Justa Canter and Consistent, Paid $137.80.

FOURTH RACE—About 7 furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 4:00. Off at 4:04. Winner, A. Nader's b. g. Loan League Opens 250,000 New Accounts

Increase for the First Quarter the Largest On Record Since 1929

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Opening of 250,000 new accounts in the savings, building and loan associations during the first quarter of the year is reported by the United States Building and Loan League to members of the District of Columbia Building and Loan League, no January-February-March period since 1929 having seen the addition of so many savers and investors to these thrift and home-financing institutions, it is announced.

The estimate is based on a cross-section of associations in many different parts of the country, including those which are growing rapidly as well as those which are slower in their recovery. A 7.7 per cent increase over the first quarter of last year, and a 6.34 gain over the last quarter of 1938 were revealed in the league's comparisons. During each of the three months about 5,000 more new accounts were opened than during the same month of 1938.

"These data show that the associations are continuing for the third successive year the net gains in number of account holders, having reversed the depression trend first in 1937 when 107,048 more people had their money in these institutions at the end than at the beginning of the year," said Morton Bodfish, Chicago, executive vice president of the United States League, on a business visit to this city.

"While we do not have all the data for 1938, it is estimated that a net gain of about 300,000 shareholders was achieved by the combined savings and loan institutions last year."

Mr. Bodfish attributed the growing numbers of new shareholders in the associations to two main forces at work today. One is the rising ability and willingness of people to save money and the other is the fact that institutions investing in home mortgages still pay a higher return to their savers than any other type of thrift institution.

Life Insurance Gains

While life insurance sales here declined 7 per cent last month in comparison with April, 1938, local business written for the first four months of the current year is 11 per cent in advance of the comparable period a year ago, latest reports of Life Insurance Sales Bureau of Hartford, Conn., reveal.

Local agents wrote $4,684,000 in life insurance policies during April and $21,735,000 in the four months' period. National volume in April was the same as that of the month last year and for the first four months of 1939 disclosed a gain of 15 per cent or 4 per cent above the local figure. National sales for the first four months aggregated $2,334,651,000.

April sales in Maryland amounted to $7,905,000, being 4 per cent ahead of the month a year ago and the States' four months' total of $33,394,000 reflected an advance of 9 per cent. New insurance in Virginia last month totaled $6,157,000, a 11 per cent recession from April, 1938. The four months' total of $30,378,000 marked a gain of 10 per cent above the comparative period last year.

West Virginia sales rose 2 per cent in the four months' comparison and North Carolina's were up 8 per cent, South Carolina's advancing 3 per cent. In these three States the April amounts were under last year's period, however. The local, or South Atlantic section was 5 per cent under in April but 9 per cent up in the four months' comparison.

In sales, Washington was ahead of New York City in the four months but behind Cleveland, Detroit, Los Angeles, Philadelphia and St. Louis in April. Chicago also showed a 7 per cent recession.

D. C. Life Underwriters

John Marshall Holcombe, jr., for nearly 20 years manager of Life Insurance Sales Research Bureau of Hartford Conn., will be the guest speaker at the May luncheon meeting of the District of Columbia Life Underwriters Association, next Thursday at the Willard Hotel. Following his talk at the luncheon, Mr. Holcombe has been asked to discuss "Selection," with managers and general agents, who are invited to meet with him in Room 901, directly after adjournment of the underwriters' meeting.

Three of the following, nominated at the last luncheon, will be elected as directors at this meeting, to serve for the next three years: Roger L. Baldwin, Northwestern mutual; Joseph A. Barbeau, Acacia Mutual; Paul P. Grove, jr., Home Life of New York; Ray D. Hotchkiss, Phoenix Mutual; John D. Marsh, Lincoln National; Curtis T. Martin, Equitable of New York.

A. B. A. Resolution

National banks in the city and throughout the country have received copies of a resolution adopted by the National Bank Division and approved by the executive council of the American Bankers Association at Hot Springs, Va., expressing opposition to the consolidation of the office of the Comptroller of the Currency with any other governmental agency. The resolution emphasizes the able service being given both to the banks and the public, in general, by the office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Pontiac Meeting

Agents of the Pontiac Motors will hold an all-day meeting at the Hay-Adams House tomorrow beginning at 8 a. m.

N. Y. City Bank Stocks Higher for Week

New York, May 22.—New York City bank stocks continued to improve during the past week, according to records compiled by Hoit, Rose & Troster, specialists in bank and insurance stocks. The aggregate market value of 16 leading issues on May 19 stood at $1,418,963,000 compared with $1,410,418,000 at the close of the previous week, an increase of $8,545,000, or 0.61 per cent.

Insurance stocks in the New York City market eased off slightly during the past week. The aggregate market value of 20 leading fire and casualty insurance issues on May 19 was $563,349,000 compared with $563,457,000 at the close of the previous week, a decline of $108,000, or 0.02 per cent.

Women Mobilize To Protect Their Invested Funds

New York, May 22.—A rousing call to American women to mobilize for their protection from the "Four Horsemen of Depression"—mounting Government debt, increasing unemployment, decreasing income and soaring taxes—was issued here today by a committee of 42 women representing 19 States.

The mobilization point will be the Second Finance Congress of Women at the Hotel Commodore, June 7 and 8, under the auspices of Women Investors of America, Inc., a Nation-wide non-profit membership organization for the economic education of women, with national headquarters at 535 Fifth avenue.

The theme of the congress will be "What is the State of the Nation?" and "How Can Women Protect Their Stake in the Nation?" Its slogan is "Let the United States Mind Our Own Business—Solve Our Problems First!"

The call was signed by Cathrine Curtis, national chairman, and the other members of the committee. Speakers from finance, industry and Government will discuss banking, insurance, the SEC, agriculture, real estate, labor, socialistic legislation, riotous spending, taxation, inflation, investment fundamentals, what the future holds for investors and how women can improve the state of the Nation.

Lumber Shipments 69 Per Cent of 1929

The lumber industry during the week ended May 13 stood at 71 per cent of the 1929 weekly average of production and 69 per cent of average 1929 shipments.

Production was about 70 per cent of the corresponding week of 1929; shipments, about 67 per cent of that week's shipments; new orders about 74 per cent of that week's orders, according to reports to the National Lumber Manufacturers Association from regional associations covering the operations of important softwood and hardwood mills.

Failures Decline

New York, May 22 (AP).—Business failures in the United States dropped to the lowest since March 2 during the week ended May 18, Dun & Bradstreet reported today. The latest total of 237 compared with 276 in the preceding week and 243 a year ago.

Loan Cotton Called Ruin to Export Trade

Only 28% Bought by Britain in April Was American Staple

New York, May 22.—Evidence continues to accumulate that the holding of most of the supply of American cotton in the Government loan stock for prices above levels competitive with prices of foreign growths is progressively destroying foreign markets for the American staple, Alston H. Gerside, economist of the New York Cotton Exchange, said today.

During April British mills took only 73,000 bales of American cotton, compared with 78,000 in the same month last season, but they took 184,000 bales of foreign growths, compared with only 110,000 in April last season. Their takings of American cotton constituted only 28 per cent of their takings of all cottons in April this year, compared with 41 per cent in April last year.

During the first nine months of the current cotton season, from August 1 to April 30, the United States exported only 2,977,000 bales of cotton, compared with 5,066,000 in the same portion of last season, but India exported 2,233,000 bales, compared with 1,485,000. British spinners recently appealed to the United States Government for the release of loan cotton.

Domestic Demand Hurt

In this country, also, the impounding of most of the supply of cotton in the Government loan stock is undermining the demand for domestic cotton. In this country the shortage of the supply of cotton in commercial channels is operating against mill demand chiefly by forcing prices of spot and nearby deliveries of cotton to large premiums over prices of more distant deliveries.

This is greatly restricting forward buying of goods, and, in turn, is making it impossible for mills to obtain remunerative margins on goods sold. During the past week the average gross mill margin on three print cloths was approximately 10.29 cents a pound, compared with approximately 12 cents two months ago, about 12.50 cents a year ago, and about 19 cents two years ago.

In consequence of the fact that the movement and consumption of Indian cotton are not throttled by any Government price-pegging loan, the stock of Indian cotton in India has been reduced to a much lower level than a year ago. On the other hand, because of the fact that the movement and consumption of American cotton have been throttled by a Government price-pegging loan, the stock of American cotton in this country has increased to the highest level ever seen in the history of the industry.

Cotton Futures Rally After Early Drop

New York, May 22 (AP).—Cotton futures rallied late today after early setbacks to close 3 points lower to 4 higher. July, the only delivery behind a minus sign, nevertheless closed at the day's high.

Responsible for the late recovery, brokers said, was buying based partly on the theory the agricultural appropriation bill regarded as price supporting element might be delayed in the House this week.

Helping to keep the near month down were Bombay sales in July against purchases in March and May. Liverpool also sold July, while a fair quantity of hedges went into new crop deliveries

Southern advices indicated spot merchants were prevented from offering the staple by insufficient supplies. Desirable grades—aside from those held in Government loans stocks—were said to be almost entirely exhausted

The Market

Prices Held Firm by Late Buying; Aviation Shares Leaders in Advance; Steel and Motor Stocks Also in Demand

New York, May 22.—The stock market dragged along today but an improvement which started in the fourth hour lasted long enough to leave the composite average up 0.33 point at the close. There was no improvement in the activity of trading, however, and only 417,060 shares changed hands on the big board. This amount was not sufficient to indicate anything unusual in the day's business and the price change also indicated that the market still is in its indecisive area.

Aviation shares were prominent in the day's advance and there was good support also for the steels, motors, metals and public utilities. Bullish forces counted the day's activities as a gain, for the foreign news was not of a peaceful nature, and if we were not so hardened by this time to word of conflict abroad, the week-end's developments might have raised havoc with our markets. In fact the bullish forces point with a certain degree of pride to the fact that this market has taken everything in the way of bearish news in its stride, including declining indices of business, bloodshed abroad and labor unrest in the domestic field.

Steel News Favorable

Week-end news contained a little of the favorable nature and the steel operating figures furnished as good an excuse as there was for the advancing price trend of the list. Production for the week was placed by the American Iron & Steel Institute at 48.5 per cent of capacity, which isn't much for a nation that has had six years of expert advice from the brains of an Administration that was going to make everything over into a Utopia, but was an improvement of 3.1 points over the preceding week.

This was virtually all the statistical information there was during the day that was of a bullish character and as the steel has been forced to bear the brunt of last week's pressure, it was decidedly welcome.

Speech of Hopkins

Aside from the day's business news, the financial district followed Washington developments with the usual degree of skepticism. There was nothing of importance to tie to. Secretary Hopkins insisted with great resolution that the underlying principles of the New Deal must be adhered to, but how can Mr. Hopkins expect to be taken seriously after the New Deal Administration has so completely turned its back on his Des Moines speech.

That speech was full of conciliation for business, of which there has been none, and his suggestion today that further Governmental control over business practices and policies should be exercised is scarcely calculated to assure investors. The Hopkins speech was printed in the last 20 minutes of the market.

Mr. Hopkins also insisted that large-scale spending by the Federal Government is defensible and must continue. He went a little further than some other Administration stalwarts and referred to use of Government funds as the "modern method of protecting our private economy." This declaration occasioned uneasiness in financial circles, since it appeared to forecast even more definitely than the trend of T. N. E. C. hearings the enlargement of a spending-lending policy that every informed financier holds to be one of the greatest dangers to our private economy.

The commodity markets had some excitement of their own, when an apparent squeeze in May wheat ended in the Chicago pit with some alleged shorts taking an alleged beating. Futures resumed their advance, and cotton steadied in the last hour of business.

The foreign exchanges remained under the rigid control of the various stabilization funds, but the dubious outlook in Europe as a whole seemed to presage fresh shipments of gold from Europe for safekeeping in this country. The exaggerated total of idle money doubtless will grow even beyond present proportions, in that event, but whether profitable use will be permitted of such funds remains still questionable.

Bond Market Firm

Listed bond trading was quiet today, with the tone firm in most departments. United States Treasury issues resumed their advance, owing to a favorable impression made by the short-term refunding of $905,000,000 guaranteed bonds of the HOLC. Speculative corporation bonds were slow to follow the late equity lead upward, but closings were mostly at better levels. Foreign dollar bonds also showed more gains than losses. Turnover was $5,140,000.

Buying of Treasury bonds was concentrated in the medium term and long issues, the former being especially in demand on the relatively short HOLC refunding. Gains ranged from 1-32 to 12-32 point, and five issues managed to establish fresh highs. The guaranteed bonds were active and better. Most utility, rail and industrial bonds in best classifications showed fractional advances, and some records were established.

Railroad bonds in the semi-investment, semi-speculative group were marked a little higher. Lower priced rails developed a degree of irregularity, while default issues likewise remained uncertain. Holding company bonds held to previous figures, but convertibles showed good results. Local tractions were idle and lower, and other special groups reflected indifference.

Italian bonds moved up in the foreign department, despite the military pact with Germany. Reich issues hardly moved, while Hungarians advanced. The high grade Scandinavians, Canadians and Australians were firm. Latin-American default bonds were better on the additional evidence of official loans by the Washington Administration to our so-called good neighbors.

May Wheat At Highest For a Year

Short Covering at Around 81 Cents Accounts for Gain

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 22.—Threat of a "squeeze" in May wheat futures ended today without a spectacular price flurry, although quotations jumped as much as 1⅜ cents to 81¼, highest any wheat contract has been quoted here since June, 1938.

With trading orderly, short covering on May contracts was accomplished at around 81 cents. The market closed at 80½-81¼, indicating wide price differences in various sections of the pit.

Liquidation Saturday of more than 900,000 bushels of May wheat left 3,902,000 bushels remaining to be settled and pit brokers said this was reduced further in today's session. Unsettled contracts will be satisfied by delivery of grain before June 1. Traders pointed out that the closing May price was near quotations on yellow hard wheat in the cash market.

Wheat closed unchanged to 1⅜ higher compared with Saturday; July, 74⅛@74¼; September, 73⅜@73¾. Corn, ⅛-⅞ lower; July, 50⅜; September, 51@51⅛. Oats, ⅛ off to ⅛ up. Rye, ½ lower to ½ higher. Lard, unchanged to 2 lower.

A Million More Employed Now Than Year Ago

New York, May 22.—The number of persons employed in the United States showed a moderate increase from February to March, rising from 39,891,000 to 40,169,000, a gain of 278,000, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute today. Although employment rose in March for the second consecutive month, the increase was not sufficient to offset the drop from December to January. Consequently, employment in March was still below the peak reached in the recovery movement during the last half of 1938. At the same time, there were 1,008,000 more persons employed in March this year than in March last year.

The number of persons unemployed naturally failed to show a corresponding reduction of the increase in the supply of workers as the result of the gain in population. However, the number of persons unemployed declined from 12,044,000 in February to 11,793,000 in March. There were 679,000 fewer persons unemployed in March this year than in the corresponding month last year, when the number of unemployed was 12,472,000.

Chicago Egg Receipts Heaviest in Ten Years

Chicago, May 22 (AP).—Egg receipts in Chicago today were the heaviest in ten years, totaling 1,719,330 dozens. Influenced by the unsettled state of the flooded cash market, egg futures closed unchanged to 17 points lower with the current month showing the maximum decline at 17.25 cents. Octobers finished 11 points lower at 18.57 after slumping 22 points from an early extreme of 18.72 cents.

Traders said short-covering prompted by the Government's interest in the level of egg prices checked the decline. In New York a trade co-operative again bid 16¼ cents unsuccessfully for eggs grading firsts.

Sweden to Build U. S. Royal Tires

New York, May 22.—Excellence of American tirebuilding technique has resulted in a co-operative agreement where "U. S. Royal" tires, product of the United States Rubber Co., will be produced hereafter by Sweden's foremost rubber company, for the Swedish market, it was announced today in New York by F. B. Davis, jr., chairman and president of the United States Rubber Co.

The announcement concluded negotiations in progress for some time between the American company and the Svenska Gummifabriks A/B, represented by Albin Johannson, president of that company. Svenska Gummifabriks A/B, is owned by the Swedish firm, Kooperative Forbundet, and produces the "Gislaved" tire. It is the largest producer of tires in Sweden. The agreement involves an exchange of engineers and other experts between the United States and Sweden.

Pipeline Revenues Below Year Ago

The Interstate Commerce Commission reported yesterday that 41 large pipeline companies had a total transportation revenue of $48,824,573 in the first quarter of 1939. This compared with total revenue of $54,745,730 for the first quarter of 1938.

These companies handled 264,031,237 barrels of oil in the first three months of this year, compared with 274,201,982 in the like period of 1938.

Boston Wool Market

Boston, May 22 (AP). (U. S. Dept. Agr.).—Trading slackened somewhat today on the Boston wool market. At the end of last week there were a few transactions of moderate volume at firm prices, but users were strongly resisting further price advances. The attitudes of buyers were indicative of less urgency in their needs as compared with the demand one and two weeks ago. Boston houses reported that offerings of wool in the country have increased with the advent of shearing.

Cy Macdonald, D.C. Sportsman, Dies at 50

Former Central High And Georgetown Athlete Organized Softball

Angus Macdonald, known as "Cy" in sporting circles in the East and South, died early yesterday at Garfield Hospital of a streptococcic infection. He had been manager of A. G. Spalding Bros. store here for about 25 years.

Thousands who have had "Cy's" personal help in organizing a sandlot team or picking out a catcher's mitt will remember him. Few men have been so widely known among Washington sportsmen.

"Cy" began his athletic career at Central High School, where he played on the baseball and football teams and put the shot and threw the javelin on the track team.

At Georgetown University, which he entered in 1909, he played baseball.

After graduation he toured the Virginias and the Carolinas as a semiprofessional with his brother, Malcolm (Mike) Macdonald. When he joined the Spalding firm he made his office the headquarters for amateur sportsmen, taking the lead in organizing amateur softball in Washington.

He leaves his wife, Mrs. Ruth Macdonald, 7709 Alaska avenue northwest; his father, David A. Macdonald; two sisters, Marian Macdonald and Mrs. Jean Lawson, and four brothers, Dr. Neil, Alexander and Malcolm, of this city, and Donald, of Olympia, Wash.

Reynolds Funeral Services Today

Funeral services for Daniel R. Reynolds, 43, manager of the Warner Bros. Penn Theater since its opening, will be held at 8:30 this morning at his home, 206 Sixth street southeast and at 9 o'clock at St. Peter's Church. Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Mr. Reynolds died Saturday in Providence Hospital after a brief illness. He had been in the theater business since 1922, when he began as an usher at the Avenue Grand Theater.

He leaves his sister, Mrs. May Virginia Murphy.

Bride Missing

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

THERESA McMAHON,

28-year-old bride-to-be was still missing from her home in Newark, N. J., yesterday and the wedding march was still ringing in the ears of John Herrion, left waiting at the altar Saturday. Miss McMahon failed to show up at the church and Herrion spent what should have been his honeymoon looking for the bride

Mrs. Atkinson, Sister of Baroness Von Below, Dies

Mrs. Callie C. Atkinson, 91, widow of Judge William M. Atkinson, of Winchester, Va., died yesterday at the home of her son-in-law, Robert W. Woolley, of 3401 Prospect avenue northwest.

Mrs. Atkinson was the sister of Baroness Nina Von Below, of Washington, and Baroness Frederich Von Conring, of Berlin.

Born in Columbia, S. C., she had lived in Washington for 20 years. Judge Atkinson died in 1911. Previously she had been married to Alfred G. Trenholm.

She leaves her daughter, Mrs. A. D. Lathrop, of Stockport, N. Y., two sons, Alfred G. Trenholm, of Georgetown, S. C., and William Mayo Atkinson, jr., of Panama City, Canal Zone, and eight grandchildren.

Services will be held in Winchester, Va., Wednesday, with the Rev. F. Bland Tucker, of Washington, officiating.

Maj. Harry Mills, Of Air Corps, Dies At Walter Reed

Maj. Harry H. Mills, 43, Air Corps, died Sunday at Walter Reed Hospital, the War Department announced yesterday.

A native of Chicago, Maj. Mills began his military service at the time of the World War, serving as a private in the Signal Corps and then as a second lieutenant in the air service. He re-entered the regular Army as a private four months after honorable discharge in March, 1919, and within a year held the rank of first lieutenant.

He became a captain in 1934 and was given temporary ranking as major a year later. Maj. Mills was a graduate of the Army Industrial College here. His last station was at Randolph Field, Tex.

Maj. Mills is survived by his wife, Mrs. Annette K. B. Mills, now en route to Washington from Texas.

Mrs. I. H. Eldridge Dies; Time Inspector's Wife

Mrs. Elizabeth Montgomery Eldridge, wife of Irving H. Eldridge, chief time inspector of the Southern Railroad, died yesterday morning at Garfield Hospital after a short illness. A native of Concord, N. C., she came to Washington in 1912.

Besides her husband, she leaves a daughter, Mary Lily Eldridge. Funeral services will be held at 3:30 p. m. today at her home, 2017 Park road northwest, with burial tomorrow morning in Elmwood Cemetery, Charlotte, N. C.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

King-Smith Studio School presents Gertrude Austin and Marthe Poncy in a recital of music for two pianos Monday evening in the Homer Kitt Studio Hall. Program: Sonata in D major (Mozart), Suite in B minor (Guy Ropartz), Suite No. 2, Op. 17 (Rakhmaninov.)

Gertrude Austin and Marthe Poncy, faculty members of the King-Smith Studio School, gave an interesting recital of music for two pianos last evening before an audience that filled the Homer Kitt Studio Hall. The two young musicians not only acquitted themselves well in synchrony, which lays so many traps for the hands of the unwary in two-piano technique, but also showed commendable consentience in details of interpretation.

Choosing Mozart as the first composer on their program, they had perforce to present a familiar work, since he wrote only two for that combination of instruments; the C minor Fugue and the D major Sonata. It was the latter which they set forth with due care for the purity of its style and the charm of its formal grace. The sonata is not one of Mozart's masterpieces, for it is too economical in ideas but the two allegro movements have delightful verve and the central andante is built on a lovely theme.

The remainder of the program carried most of the auditors on a voyage of discovery, for the two compositions performed are not often found in the repertoire of duopianists. One was the suite in B minor by the late Breton composer, Joseph Guy Marie Ropartz. Serious in mood and rich in harmonic vesture, the suite seems from internal evidence to have been written early in his career, while he was still under the influence of his last and greatest teacher, Cesar Franck. The music abounds in Franckian chromaticism, and the emotional tone is mystical in tendency.

The other novelty was Rakhmaninov's second suite, one of the works which he composed in 1901 just after he had recovered, under the psychiatric treatment of Dr. Dahl, from the nervous depression that had threatened to block his creative impulses. It is a joyous and optimistic set of pieces, fresh in ideation and adroit in technical devices. The introduction reminds one, in its stirring vigor and impetuous advance, of the "Meistersinger" vorspiel; the valse is remarkable for the skill with which the three-beat rhythm is disguised and relieved of its monotony, and for some charming two-voiced passages of lyric beauty. The romance is typical of the composer's thematic vein, and the closing tarantelle is curiously reminiscent of the C sharp minor prelude, with the melancholy replaced by good cheer.

Contract Bridge

By R. F. Foster.

Almost since the beginning of contract New York City has been its heart and soul. It has boasted of the most skillful players, the newest theories of bidding and play, and the finest tournaments. But in spite of its enviable position as the leader of bridge for the world, it has been steadily declining in sociability.

There is something foreboding in all this grimness. It would seem that such cities as Los Angeles, Washington, Chicago and others, where many more of the citizens take part in tournaments, nearly all of which are gay, light-hearted social affairs, contract has a much better future than here in our barren, academic atmosphere where to smile is to give special information to partner.

Bridge is an integral part of the social life of the capital city, and yet it has managed to escape the craving for superiority that blights New York. In one week, Washington players elected officers of their extremely active league, participated in their annual team of four matches, migrated to Alexaxndria, Va., to compete for the Northern Virginia titles, played in many local games, and attended (those who were members) the National Press Club's bridge festivities.

Frank B. Lord, who with Mrs. Fran . Guest as partner was among the leaders for the Mexican Ambassador's cup, describes today's hand from Washington tournament play.

The bidding which reached three no trump was as light-headed as it was light-hearted. But the bid was made when dame Fortune arranged that the defense should slip and lose the setting trick by blocking its best suit.

West led a low diamond. East put up the queen, and declarer won with the ace. He led a spade and on the second round West won the ace, playing another diamond in the hopes that the queen promised strength.

East won the trick with the diamond king and hastily laid down the club king. West was confronted with a losing choice. Should he let the king ride, he probably could not enter his partner's hand after winning the ace. Should he overtake and return the club six, it was doubtful that his partner could win more than one club trick. West held off and upon taking the club ace, led another diamond, but declarer had ample tricks in the three suits, spades, hearts and diamonds to fulfill his contract. He lost a diamond, a spade and two clubs.

Serious bridge players would bid the hand to four spades at which they could make five easily. Only a diamond and the ace of trumps need be lost.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

Notes: The Washington Federal service sent three girls to New York, in the Post-A. F. G. E. Beauty With Brains contest, who pleased that cynical town a great deal. The situation of three girls who combined beauty with intellect was something new up there and something new always causes comment and enthusiasm in that town . . . Defeat of the bill permitting clerks to Congressmen and Congressional committees to be covered into permanent jobs in the classified civil service is advocated by the National Civil Service Reform League, an influential organization . . . The reason for the N. C. S. R. L.'s stand probably is based on the uncertain nature of these positions, the uncertainess of the tenure . . . In these last remarks on the Beauty With Brains Contest, some sort of verbal tribute should go to Hebert Stropie and Edward McGinnis, of the American Federation of Government Employes, for the efficient manner in which they conducted the tour of the contest winners in New York. As one New York reporter said in his story "they got everything but a 21-gun salute."

And there was not a single embarrassment in the whole program . . . I. D. R. A. events: The season's first moonlight cruise and dance will be held by the I. D. R. A. tonight aboard the S. S. Potomac. The boat leaves at 8:45 p. m.; also, an old fashioned family picnic on Saturday, June 10, at Fort Hunt, Va. There will be dancing, games and eats . . . More I. D. R. A.: At least three teams representing the I. D. R. A. will appear in the Medal Play Tournament of the Federal Golf Association at the Indian Springs Golf Course on June 5 and 6, it is announced by Charles A. King, chairman of the golf activities. The possibility is for an entry of six teams by the association . . . Members of the D. C. Branch of the First Division Society will celebrate the twenty-first anniversary of the Battle of Cantigny, with a dinner and dance Saturday night at the Lee House. Cadet Col. Gordon L. Calvert, of Roosevelt High School, will be presented a sword by Brig. Gen. E. D. Scott, D. C. Branch president. A sword has been presented each of the past six years to the cadet who attains the highest honors in military science in the high school cadet corps in the District. Brig. Gen. Maxwell Murray will be toastmaster, while Lieut. Col. William G. Livesay, U. S. A., Office of the Chief of Infantry, is chairman of general arrangements . . . Hello, what's going on here? When Miss Beauty With Brains went to the New York World's Fair, under sponsorship of the American Federation of Government Employes, the understanding was that May 20 was "Government Employes' Day" at the Fair. Now comes an announcement from the National Federation Employes, to wit: "Uncle Sam's Workers, whose duties and accomplishments are strikingly dramatized in a remarkable series of exhibits at the New York World's Fair, will be honored in person by The World of Tomorrow Exposition. Designation of June 24 as 'Federal Employes' Day' is hailed by officials of the fair corporation as 'tangible recognition of the part Federal employes are playing in our national life, and of the vital tasks they perform in behalf of the whole people.'" Sponsorship of this "Government Employes' Day" has been left to the National Legislative Council of Federal Employe Organizations whose constituent bodies—the N. F. F. E., the United National Association of Postoffice Clerks, the National Association of Postal Supervisors, and the National Rural Letter Carriers Association—comprise approximately 175,000 persons . . . Ten season passes to the Welfare and Recreational Association's swimming pools will be awarded to writers of ten best essays on swimming. The recreational, health and safety benefits of pools are suggested themes. The contest is open to all; the essays must be received by the association not later than midnight of June 1. The papers should not contain more than 250 words. The winners will be announced on June 3, the day the pools open. The pools to which the contest winners will be admitted free are Anacostia, McKinley, Takoma, Banneker and Francis.

Bob Burns Says—

You hear a whole lot about this age of specialization. I reckon every college student—who ain't swallowin' goldfish—is learnin' a special trade. Even my Cousin Wafford is takin' a correspondence course in runnin' an Escort Service in Van Buren.

Last summer my Aunt Pudey went to the mansion of Mrs. Van Glutz, and after she'd looked over Aunt Pudey a minute she said, "I've had a terrible time trying to get a good servant. Can you cook and scrub?"

Aunt Pudey said, "Uh-uh."

Then the lady said, "Can you iron and wash?"

And Aunt Pudey said, "Naw."

Mrs. Van Glutz said, "Well, what on earth can you do?"

And Aunt Pudey said, "I'm a specialist—I dust!"

Secrets in Love

By Phyllis Moore Gallagher

Joan had come to Aunt Mehalia's home with a plea that she be allowed to live there, now that she was "a working girl." Anthony consented. Peg knew that Joan was in love with Duncan. As Peg and Joan were talking about Duncan, Aunt Mehalia called and told Peg that Hewitt was there. Peg tried to put on a bold front when she met Hewitt, but soon he was able to overcome her reserve and once more had her in his arms.

Chapter XVI

Six months ago when Otto Nelson had told Hewitt Gill that his goddaughter had lost her parents in an automobile accident, that she was coming up from Richmond to live with a spinster aunt in Georgetown and that she would work in his office, Hewitt had had no more interest in Peg Patterson than he did in Doris Murphy and Maizie Darton, which was virtually none. They were all just girls in the office, working for a living.

He had been a little surprised to discover, however, that the old man's goddaughter was slim and aristocratically beautiful and spoke with a voice that was oddly stirring, soft and Southern. But even more surprising was her influence over old Nelson.

Otto Nelson was hard-boiled, gruff, cold and undemonstrative. He had never married. He was set in his ways, and at 70 was stubborn, unreasonable and often cantankerous. He was the devil to get along with in the office. And yet, in one of his very infrequent confidences, he had said with his face more gentle than Gill had ever remembered seeing it before: "If I have a weak spot for any one in this world, it's Peg Patterson. Why, ever since she was a little tike with long fair pigtails and wide blue eyes that looked straight at you and made you feel that you weren't fit to live in the same world with her . . ."

There had been a whole half hour's talk like that. But even then he had not expected that one day he would ask Peg Patterson to marry him. Even yesterday he had not thought that he would.

Missed at the Office

For three days now, all yesterday morning, yesterday afternoon, all this morning, he had gone in and out of Peg's office. He had stood at her vacant desk and had seen her in a dozen different poses there, looking up at him with those blue-black eyes, chewing nervously on the rubber of a pencil when she couldn't add up a column of figures, and the frightened look that came over her small lovely face when old Nelson stalked up to her desk and raised the roof over some mistake she had made. She never seemed to realize that if she smiled at old Nelson, if she so much as let tears wash the surface of her eyes, the old man would have scuttled off in a thawed out panic.

Night before last Hewitt had left the office early. At the door Nelson had told him that Peg wouldn't be able to see him, that she had resigned her position because she wasn't well. Mr. Nelson was worried about Peg. He had said: "I've got to go up to New York tonight, Gill. You look in on the kid first chance you get. Be sure that aunt of hers gets the right doctor to go over her." He had scribbled some names on a slip of paper. "These doctors are all first class. Give that to Mehalie. And tell her that if she doesn't have Peg back on her feet and in this office in less than a month, Ill . . . bah!"

He had stuffed the slip of paper in his pocket and had gone on out. He hadn't intended to take it to Peg. He would mail it, for he never intended to see Peg again. He had told himself, "I'm glad she quit. I'm well out of that." He had got in his car and had driven out into one of the beautiful suburbs. Had parked there in the shadows of those rambling, gracious homes where he was often entertained. Had looked at the acreage where he planned to build his own home some day. When the partnership was a sure thing and when people weren't so scared about business and political conditions.

"A smart man marries the kind of woman who helps him rise in the world," he had told himself looking very hard at the spot where he meant his home to stand. "A famous statesman's daughter, some one like Thalia Polk, who has money and the right social advantages."

Visit to Thalia

If he had thought that would stop him from thinking of Peg, he had been very mistaken. After a time he gave up and drove back into town, a little too fast and more than a little recklessly. "Think about her all you please, you fool," he had thought bitterly. "But don't ever see her again."

He had pulled up in front of Thalia's home. He had been passing, he told Mrs. Polk, had heard the music and had been bold enough to come in. His charm cloaked the real rudeness of the thing he was doing and he knew it. Mrs. Polk had never liked him particularly. He was no more the match she had planned for Thalia than Peg was the match he had determined upon, long ago for himself. Mrs. Polk wanted someone like that Anthony Covington she was always prattling about. "Tony's sure to be an ambassador one of these days. Such a brilliant boy, my dear, so terribly handsome. Splendid family, too. Sons of the Cincinnati, old Knickerbocker stock . . . that sort of thng."

Mrs. Polk had talked of Anthony and had wondered where on earth he was keeping himself; she had talked of Roosevelt and of the chances of a third term or a Republican Administration. He had listened dutifully, sitting there on the sofa beside her, but not really hearing. He had just sat there looking around the spacious drawing room; a long, beautifully furnished room with indirect lights, quite subdued, with shadows pale and dappled on the Oriental rugs. This was the background he had always seen for himself. Money plus culture plus family. Not an old family like Peg's, not branching from cavaliers and members of the House of Burgesses and Signers and certainly not eligible for the Dames . . . but old enough.

Almost Proposes

Thalia had walked up to the sofa, shattering his thoughts. She had taken his hand, had said: "Mother, darling, don't you know that this Administration doesn't approve of monopolies, and that's precisely what you're doing." In the conservatory she had sat down on a sofa, making a place for him. She had still held his hand, touching first one finger and then another. She had said, rather softly, "Hewitt, you're different this year. Last year you asked me to marry you about six nights each week. This year you haven't mentioned it." She had wanted to know with a gay young voice—which hadn't been really gay at all—if there was some one else.

He had said: "No, of course, there isn't, darling. There's never been any one but you." He'd said that last year, too. It had been true then. Futilely true, because she was only interested in him as some one who amused her, who kissed her as she wanted to be kissed when she wanted to. And now, suddenly, he knew that some time during the Summer he had quit handing Peg a line so that she would say a good word about him to old Otto Nelson, had begun to mean what he said. And he knew also that he was a fool. Because Thalia Polk was looking at him these days as she had never looked at him before.

He'd almost said: "Thalia, marry me, darling. I've asked you a thousand times. You've said no a thousand times. This time you'll say yes." But he hadn't.

Now he was in a Georgetown kitchen with a small, fair girl in his arms. Kissing her. Talking about love. About marriage, because you couldn't talk about anything but marriage to a girl like Peg. If you could, everything would have been so much simpler . . .

Peg was laughing a little as she stood back from him after that kiss. This was what she had hoped for, prayed for, and yet it was a moment too shining to be grasped. She hadn't answered Hewitt at once because she couldn't.

When she finally spoke, she said: "I though you'd never ask me, darling. I thought you really didn't want me—after all."

Breaking the News

They told Aunt Mehalie standing side by side in the living room. The little old lady sank back in the chair aghast. She didn't say a word and Peg could almost feel her thoughts, darting in her head like small frightened mice. Searching for something to say that would hide completely how she felt, Peg's blue eyes begged her aunt to know that she was all wrong about Hewitt, begged her not to spoil something that was so perfect, so completely beautiful that she could hardly believe it herself.

"We're going to be married in February or March," Peg said swiftly. "Right here in this house, Aunt Mehalie. There'll be a preidieu under that arch with candles in tall silver holders behind the minister. That archway is almost identical with the one at Arlington House and Mary Curtis and Robert E. Lee stood under it for their marriage ceremony. I remember granddaddy was there that day. He told me all about it." Her voice rushed on excitedly. "I'll have Mary and Babs and Doris Ann up from Richmond for bridesmaids, Joan the maid of honor . . ."

It was not until she spoke Joan Covington's name that Peg remembered that Anthony was still in this room. Still standing over by the window. She turned and looked at him now. Saw the rigidity of his back, his face blank with the amazement of a man who has been struck without warning.

She said, "Anthony . . ."

The Door Slams

But he did not look at her. He was looking at Hewitt instead. At the possessiveness in Hewitt's eyes, his confident, arrogant dark charm. Anthony's face paled with a slow bitter look. It was half wretchedness, half incredulity. He turned and faced Peg at last.

"I hope you'll be very happy," he said in a suffocated voice.

He went out of the room rather slowly, through the hall. He didn't Peg knew, mean to slam the door. But when he opened it a gust of wind rushed through the house and the door slammed with a terrific bang. The old walls reveberated. Peg took one step as if to follow him, for something outside of her was reaching out to Anthony, calling him back.

Hewitt caught her arm, held her close to him. And Peg standing there wondered why the crash of that door kept ringing and ringing in her ears. Why suddenly she wanted to cry.

To Be Continued Tomorrow.

Complete Text of President Roosevelt's Speech Before American Retail Group

Is Proud of 95% Efficiency of Work Relief and Will Not 'Condemn' Americans To 'Dryrot of Idleness' on Dole, He Says

The text of President Roosevelt's address last night follows::

I am happy to speak at this first forum of the American Retail Federation. I feel a kinship between your business and mine. The backbone of the customers we are both trying to satisfy is the same—in your case the many small customers whose steady demand for the necessities and a few luxuries of life make up your volume—in my case millions of average American families whose standard of living is the practical measure of the success of our democracy.

For you who are in the honorable business of storekeeping, the flow of consumer purchasing power determines the difference between red and black on your account books; and for the Nation the difference between unemployment and prosperity.

That is why I want to devote this opportunity to a discussion of Government fiscal policy in relation to consumer purchasing power.

Some highbrow columnists and some high-geared economists say that you and I think too much about consumers' purchasing power and look at our economic problems from the wrong end. They say that we should glue all of our attention on the heavy industries, and should do everything and anything just to get these industries to work and to get private investors to put up the money to build new buildings and new machines without regard to the average consumer's need or his ability to use these buildings or machines.

By and large, you will find that these experts are the same as those who in 1929 told us that conditions were sound and that we had found the way to end poverty when we were building luxurious office buildings, hotels and apartment houses which consumers did not need and had not the purchasing power to pay for.

Are Still Unrealistic

Today in 1939 they tell you that conditions are not sound because we are trying to build the sort of houses and other things which our people really need, and because we are trying to make sure that our people have the purchasing power to pay for these things.

They were unrealistic and theoretical when they were prophesying their new era in 1929—they are just as unrealistic and theoretical and wrong—when they are prophesying national bankruptcy in 1939.

To translate this into terms of the retail trade, the shelves of heavy industries in 1929 were seriously overstacked. You know what happens to storekeepers if they buy twice as much as the public can buy from them.

In the last analysis, therefore, consumer buying power is the milk in the cocoanut of all business.

Whether you are a big department store or do business in a small way on the main street of a small town, your sales are dependent on how much money the average family in the community earns. That is a homely way of putting it, but it is an eternal truth.

That is one reason why I have talked about the one-third of our population that is ill clad, ill housed, ill fed. That third—40,000,000 people—can buy very little at the stores. Therefore, their local stores can order very little at the factories. Some of my friends laugh at me when I stress this, laugh at efforts to establish minimum wages. But the little and the big storekeepers understand and know they will sell more goods if their customers have more money. I want, and I think I have your help, to build up the purchasing power of the average of your customers.

Experience Denies Theory

One school of thought is what I call the school of the gamblers. You find some of them in every community—as well as in Wall Street, and some of them, the political variety, even in the halls of the Congress and State Legislatures.

That school is eager to gamble the safety of the Nation and of our system of private enterprise on nothing more than their personal hunch that if Government will just keep its hands off the economic system customers will just happen. I use the word "gamble" because there is no modern experience to support their theory.

In fact, modern experience denies their theory. Between 1925 and 1933 Government abandoned practically all concern for business and put into effect a tax system such as "Old Dealers" dream about. Customers and the buying power of customers were left just to happen. You know how many and how much happened.

These people who are playing the "it may happen" hunch today are actually the wildest-eyed radicals in our midst, because despite proved failures they want to gamble on their own hunch once more.

In the other school of thought we are conservative New Dealers. We are the conservatives because we simply cannot bring ourselves to take radical chances with other people's property and other people's lives.

Now the owner of a private business may have the legal right to take a long chance that may make or break his personal fortune. If he alone goes out of business, the economic system is not endangered.

But the people who run the three branches of our Government do not have the moral right to gamble with the well-being of 120,000,000 Americans. If millions of citizens starve, it is no answer to the starving to say that in the sweet by-and-by business, left to itself, will give them a job. Partisans are going around the country scaring parents who are not starving by telling them of an increased national debt which their grandchildren will have to pay. Certainly that is not as alarming as telling parents who are already starving that an untrammeled business set-up will provide their grandchildren with food in 1989. Yet that is what the radical gamblers of business and politics might have to say if they put their theories into practice next year.

Not one of you who are good Americans and practical Americans believe that we could repeat the catastrophe of those years immediately preceding and following 1929 and emerge from it with our economic and social system unchanged. No business man, big or little, can fairly or patriotically ask his Government to take a course of action that runs that risk.

That is why our school of thought—the conservative school—holds the view that an intelligent nation should rest its faith in arithmetic rather than in a hunch.

Today, in order to provide customers for business, your Government uses Government capital to provide jobs, to prevent farm prices from collapsing and to build up purchasing power when private capital fails to do it. For example, out of every dollar spent by the Federal Government to provide jobs, more than 50 cents passes over the counters of the retail merchants of America.

Cut Budget, How?

We also use what we call social legislation—such as legislation to encourage better pay for low-paid labor and thereby provide more and better customers for you; such as legislation to protect investors so that they may continue to be your customers without losing their savings in worthless stocks and bonds.

I wonder if you have any conception of the number of businessmen and bankers and economists whom I talk with briefly or at length in any given month of the year. I wonder if you have any conception of the variety of suggestions and panaceas they offer me. I wonder if you know the very large percentage of them who honestly and very naturally think of national problems solely in terms of their own business. I wonder if you will be surprised if I tell you that most of them leave my office saying to me—"Why, Mr. President, I did not know about that. You have given me a new perspective. I never thought of the problem in that way before."

I sit in my office with a businessman who thinks the surest way to produce customers is to balance the Federal budget at once. I say to him—"How?"

Sometimes he says—"How should I know? That is your job." Sometimes he says—"Cut the budget straight through 10 per cent or 20 per cent."

Then I take from my desk drawer a fat book and it is apparent at once that he has never seen or read the budget of the Government of the United States.

Can't Cut Defense Funds

He tries to change the subject but I hold him to it. I say—"This budget is not all of one piece; it is an aggregate of hundreds of items. Either we will have to cut every item 10 per cent or 20 per cent or, if we do not do this, cut some items very much more than 10 per cent or 20 per cent."

I point out the one and a half billion dollars for the Army and Navy. He pounds the desk and says—"Don't cut that item—not in these days."

I show him the item of $1,000,000,000 for interest on the public debt. He owns some Government bonds and rejects any cut in his interest.

I show him the $1,000,000,000 item for war and civil service pensions. He says—"No—no cut there."

I mention the billion dollars for running the permanent functions of the regular Government departments—they cost less today than under my predecessor. He readily agrees that the postman and the G-man and the Forest Service cannot be curtailed. The only people he would sever from the pay rolls are the tax collectors.

In Transitional Period

That gets us down to a few other big items—totaling over $4,000,000,000 to take care of four things—payments to agriculture, Federal public works (including PWA, reclamation and flood control), work relief for the unemployed (including CCC) and assistance for our old people.

My visitor agrees with me that we are going through a transitional period, seeking the best way to maintain decent prices for the farm population of America, trying to make them better customers of businessmen—and that even if we have not yet found the permanent solution, we have got away permanently from 5-cent cotton and 10-cent corn and 30-cent wheat.

I come to the public works item. He suggests that that can be cut 50 per cent. I happen to know that his community is working tooth and nail to get a grant for a much needed new high school or that his county suffered severe property losses from recent floods. I suggest that we will start economy right there and not give the grants, defer building the levee or the flood control dam for 20 or 30 years.

In every case I find what I suspected. His local chamber of commerce, his local newspapers are yelling their heads off to have those projects built with Federal assistance. And I say to him—"Consistency, thy name is geography. You believe with the United States Chamber of Commerce that Federal spending on public works should cease—except in your own town."

95 Per Cent of Relief Sound

The items of funds for work relief; there my visitor-customer makes a last stand. He wants that cut, and cut hard.

We agree that there are between three and four million American workers, who, with their families, need work or money to keep alive. I drive him to the inevitable admission that the only alternative is to put them on a dole.

That is where I make a stand.

I tell my visitor that never so long as I am President of the United States will I condemn millions of men and women to the dry-rot of idleness on a dole; never condemn the business enterprise of the United States to the loss of millions of dollars worth of customer purchasing power; never take the terrific risk of what would happen to the social system of American democracy if we foisted on it an occasional basket of groceries instead of the chance to work.

I well know the difficulties and the costs of a work policy.

I do not have to be told that 5 per cent of the projects are of questionable value—I know it. Or, that 5 per cent of the people on relief projects ought not to be on the rolls—I know that, too. But when you think of nearly three million men and women scattered over all the 48 States and all of the 3,100 counties in America, I am proud of the fact that 95 per cent of the projects are good, and that 95 per cent of the people are properly on the rolls. And I know that the American people cannot be fooled into believing that the few exceptions actually constitute the general practice.

My friend across the desk murmurs something about old-age pensions. He is a bit half-hearted about this and he finally admits not only the need for dignified support of old age, given and accepted as a new American right, but he realizes that over a period of years this support will have to be extended rather than reduced. You and I and all Americans agree that we must work out this problem for our old people.

And so my visitor leaves convinced, in nine cases out of ten, that balancing the budget today, or even next year, is a pretty difficult if not an impossible job.

A few words about Federal taxes:

They fall into three principal categories—consumer taxes, like the taxes on cigarettes and gasoline and liquor; personal taxes, like the personal income taxes and the inheritance taxes; and, finally, taxes on corporations. Together they yield nearly six billion dollars.

For good sound business reasons two things seem clear to me.

First, especially in view of the unbalanced budget, we ought not to raise less money from taxation than we are doing now.

Second, it would be bad for business to shift any further burden to consumer taxes. The proportion of consumer taxes to the total is plenty high enough as it is. Remember, as businessmen and as retailers, that any further taxes on consumers, like a sales tax, means that the consumers can buy fewer goods at your store.

Must Retain Principles

That means that if we reduce so-called deterrent taxes on business corporations, we must find substitute taxes to lay on business corporations. That language is as plain as an old shoe. Let me give you an example of what I call making a mountain out of a mole hill. There is a hullabaloo for the repeal of the undistributed earnings tax. You would think that this was the principal deterrent to business today. Yet it is a simple fact that out of $1,100,000,000 paid to the Federal Government by corporations, less than $20,000,000 comes to the Government from the undistributed earnings tax—less than 2 per cent of the total.

Let me proceed. I am wholly willing to have this $20,000,000 tax, less than 2 per cent of the total, wholly repealed on two simple conditions, which are based on principle.

The first is that this $20,000,000 shall be raised by some other form of tax against corporations and not against other groups of taxpayers—and that it shall be raised in such a way that it will be paid by the 28,000 bigger corporations, earning more than $25,000 a year, and not by the 175,000 little corporations earning less than that sum.

The second condition is that in the repeal of this tax we shall not return to the old tax evasion loophole by which a small group of very rich people were able to leave their profits in closely held corporations, thus avoiding the full rates of the higher brackets on their personal incomes. Patriotic people will not want to go back to that pernicious habit.

Talks About the Debt

I have talked with you at some length about the radicals who have the hunch that we ought to go back to the conditions of 1929; about performing a major operation by amputating present functions of government; and about the efforts of some who would reduce corporation taxes and add to consumer taxes.

But I would not have you believe that the conservative attitude of this Administration plans as any permanent part of our American system an indefinite continuation of excess of outgo over cash receipts.

This week is dedicated by the opponents of the Administration to merchandising horror about the national debt. We are having a National Debt Week, like a National Clean-Up and Paint-Up Week.

Let us talk about the debt in businessmen's terms.

In the first place, a Nation's debt, like the deposit liability of a bank, must be considered in relation to its assets.

A large part of the Government debt is offset by debts owed to the Government—loans of many kinds made on a business basis by the RFC and the Farm Credit Administration, for instance, and now being repaid on schedule. These assets are just as sound as the loans made by the bankers of the country.

Government Is Investing

Another portion of the debt is invested in Federally owned enterprises, like Boulder Dam, which will pay out, principal and interest, over a period of years.

A third part of the debt has been invested in works like flood control dams and levees, to save us from heavy future losses. They will pay for themselves in a very few years by eliminating annual property damage which each year has run into hundreds of millions—pay by the saving of taxable values which otherwise would have floated off down stream.

The next thing to remember about the debt is that Government, like business men, is investing in order to create a higher volume of business income and, therefore, a bigger net yield for Government. National income will be greater tomorrow than it is today because Government has had the courage to borrow idle capital and put idle labor to work.

The year befor I took office, our national income was 39 billions. In 1937 it got up to 69 billions. In 1938 it went back to 62 billions. Today it is running at the rate of 65 billions. At 80 billions, the income from present taxes will be sufficient to meet expenditures on the present scale—and actually to reduce our relief appropriations.

Today with no danger of surplus of goods overhanging the market—just because we have tried to keep consumer purchasing power up to production—the Nation is in an excellent position to move forward into a period of greater production and greater employment.

Nation Will Pay Itself

And, when this week you see all the crocodile tears about the burden on our grandchildren to pay the Government debt, remember this:

Our national debt after all is an internal debt owed not only by the Nation but to the Nation. If our children have to pay interest on it they will pay that interest to themselves. A reasonable internal debt will not impoverish our children.

But if we do not allow a democratic Government to do the things which need to be done and hand down to our children a deteriorated Nation, their legacy will be not a legacy of abundance or even a legacy of poverty amidst plenty, but a legacy of poverty amidst poverty.

Don't you agree that it is better to work unitedly to balance national income and national out-go at a level where Government can do the things that have to be done to preserve our people and our resources, than to play the speculative hunch and withdraw Government from lending and investment, from conserving property and from providing work for our capital and our people, in the hope that in some mysterious way a miracle will occur—a miracle which our only experience under modern conditions have proved impossible?

Welcomes Advice

I keep saying, "Do not lose sight of the forest because of the trees." Let us always distinguish principles and objectives from details and mechacnics. You cannot expect this Administration to alter the principles and objectives for which we have struggled the last six years.

But if you approve of the purposes that lie behind our policies, but believe our operating methods can be improved, then your help and your counsel are welcome—doubly welcome in this Administration. That relates to the details of taxation, details of relief, the details of every administrative branch of the Government.

If I have spoken to you seriously tonight, it is because I believe that you, too, are thinking of the well-being of every man, woman and child in our country—that you go along with me in every effort that I can make for the preservation of world peace and for the preservation of domestic peace—not merely an armed peace which foregoes war for the moment, but a peace that comes from a knowledge, both abroad and at home, that there will be no further acts of aggression on the part of nations, on the part of groups or on the part of individuals. You think, rightly, of profits in your own business—so does every other American—so do I. But we are not ruled by the thought of profits alone. More and more we seek the making of profits by processes that will not destroy our fellow men who are our neighbors.

That is one of the functions of your Government. It seeks your co-operation in the extension of that ideal. It is open to your advice and your help—because it believes that its fundamental ideals and yours are the same.

That is why I came to you not in the spirit of criticism, not with a big stick, but with a simple plea for your assistance as American citizens in working out our common problems with good-will and with the maintenance of the ideals of peace.
